Camp Springs Approved for D. C. Airport

Heat Kills 164 Over Country, Two Die Here; '37 Mark Set

Boy Drowns and Woman Dies of Heart Attack in Capital.

Babe Ruth Stricken During Golf Game

The summer's greatest heat wave blazed a path of death and suffering across more than half the Nation yesterday, bringing its death toll to 164 with two additional fatalities in the District raising Washington's three-day total to four.

From sunbaked Nebraska to Boston and from Michigan to New Orleans the searing weather gave no quarter.

In Washington a youth was drowned as he sought comfort in the river at Water and O streets southwest, and an elderly woman was found dead in her home of a heart attack brought on by the heat. A Silver Spring, Md., boy was drowned in Pennsylvania.

As the temperature reached the season's high of 95.4 here late yesterday afternoon, the Weather Bureau promised no surcease for several days, and the forecaster predicted today would be fair and continued warm, with a slight possibility of brief thunderstorms late this afternoon.

Exodus From Cities.

In the wake of the blistering weather, millions of Americans fled to beaches and mountains and woods for the week-end. President Roosevelt left the seared Capital for a "working cruise" aboard the yacht Potomac. Near New York City, Babe Ruth, once the home run king of kings, collapsed on a golf course and was carried to the clubhouse. His condition last night, however, was not regarded as serious.

Samuel David Williams, 18, of 1120 New Jersey avenue southeast, drowned while swimming off a pier at Water and O streets southwest yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Lillie May Walker, 65, wife of Maj. T. V. Walker, U. S. A., was found dead in her home from a heart attack aggravated by the heat. Mrs. Walker was president of the Women's Auixliary of the American Legion and prominent in club organization worw.

Friend Goes to Rescue.

Williams, police learned, was swimming in the Potomac against the advice of a more cautious companion, Billy Fry, 14, of 471 N street southwest. When Fry heard Williams cry for help, he tore off his clothes and went to the rescue. The older boy proved too hard to handle. Fry was treated for exhaustion and sent home. Williams' body was recovered 13 minutes after the tragedy.

A Silver Spring boy was drowned yesterday afternoon in a State-operated pool at Caledonia State Park, Pa. He was Arthur Wheeler, 7, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Wheeler. His body was found in 4½ feet of water and lifeguards could not understand the cause of the fatal accident.

Charges Through Window.

Maddened by the heat, McQueen charged through the plate glass window of a furniture store at Seventh and D streets northwest,

Navy to Switch Earhart Hunt To Open Water

Search of Phoenix Isles Proves Futile; Putnam to Return Home.

By the Associated Press.

Honolulu, July 10.—Holding little hope for rescue of Amelia Earhart, Navy fliers from the battleship Colorado scanned the Phoenix Islands today while the aircraft carrier Lexington with 300 aviators hurried on for a "last-chance" survey of the South Pacific area, where she disappeared eight days ago.

Without clews and virtually without hope aviation's first lady and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, would be found, the Colorado's airmen pointed their three catapult planes toward the main Phoenix group, tiny bits of land.

Naval searchers expressed the opinion today's survey would exhaust the best chances for a rescue. They said the hunt probably would turn to open water southeast of Howland tomorrow.

The Lexington planned to reach the search area by Monday morning and naval authorities said she might unleash the entire brood of 62 flighting planes at once.

Capable of covering 60,000 square miles daily, this air armada was expected to bring the hunt to a swift conclusion.

George Palmer Putnam, husband of the missing aviatrix, arranged to quit his long vigil beside Coast Guard and naval radio operators in San Francisco and leave for his North Hollywood home.

Putnam said he had not given up hope for the fliers who disappeared on a flight from Lae, New Guinea, to Howland Island.

"It's just that I feel there is nothing more than I can do here," he said. "Miss Earhart's mother (Mrs. Amy Earhart) is at my home," he added, "and I thought I should be with her."

He arranged with Lieut. Frank Johnson, Coast Guard communications officer in San Francisco, to continue receiving reports of the search at his southern California home. His son, David Binney Putnam, 24, planned to accompany him southward.

The Colorado's aviators, empty-handed after three days of flying over the island group designated as the most likely place to search, undertook a broad survey of four or five small dots of reef-encircled land southeast of Howland Island.

Los Angeles, July 10 (AP).—George Gershwin, noted composer, was reported near death of a brain tumor tonight by hospital attendants.

He had been under treatment in the hospital before, but had been released a few days ago. As he grew worse today, several local brain specialists were summoned and the aid of Dr. Walter Dandy, Eastern specialist, was sought.

Surgeon Gets Plea.

Cambridge, Md., July 10 (AP).—Dr. Walter Dandy, Baltimore brain specialist, coming ashore tonight from the State yacht duPont, did not reveal whether or not he would fly to California to operate on George Gershwin, musical composer, critically ill with brain tumor. The physician had been in touch with Coast Guard headquarters at Washington. Dr. Dandy was cruising on Chesapeake Bay with Gov. Harry W. Nice and a party of the Governor's friends when he received the Coast Guard's relayed appeal from Emil Mosbacher, of White Plains, N. Y., a friend of Gershwin, to operate on the composer in Los Angeles.

Triplets floated over Washington for a few minutes yesterday—and this time they were not borne by the stork—as the 5-week-old Middleton sisters headed for their summer playground in New England.

In custody of their mother, Mrs. A. Robertson Middleton, 31 West Irving street, Chevy Chase, the baby girls were placed aboard a transport plane at Washington Airport for a flight to Boston, first infant triplets ever to leave the District by air.

Their father, who is athletic director at St. Alban's School here, was to meet his family in Boston last night, then put them on a train bound for Portland, Me. The group's ultimate destination is Camp Mechano, on Lake Sebago.

The triplets were Mary Warner, Adelaide DuBos and Frances Devismes and their initial plane flight coincided exactly with their thirty-seventh (days) birthday.

Mrs. Middleton had three special hostesses to assist her on the aerial journey. The trip was made easier by the fact that the plane was scheduled to arrive in Newark at 6 p. m., bottle feeding time.

May Consider U. S. Fund Proviso if Reported by Committee.

Majority Leader Robinson yesterday expressed the opinion that a joint resolution enabling the District to obtain emergency loans might be acted upon by the Senate if reported by the Senate District Committee.

While pointing out that the action would have to be by unanimous consent, Senator Robinson said he "guessed" such a resolution would not be controversial.

At the same time he indicated there is little likelihood that the omnibus tax bill will be called up until there is a definite break in the court debate. He reiterated that it is too controversial for passage under unanimous consent.

Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, chairman of the House sub-committee on District revenue, plans to offer a joint resolution tomorrow authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make advances to the District government.

Prompt approval by the House District Committee is expected, as the committee passed upon such an authorization as a title of the local tax bill. Some trouble may be encountered in the House, however, as the House refused to let the authorization remain in the tax measure.

Amid growing alarm over the precarious fiscal state of the District government, the Commissioners still talked of appealing to the President for intervention, but it was uncertain just what he might be able to do.

District officials have informally set August 1 as the deadline up to which the city government can meet all expenses.

Spanish Border Opens Tuesday, France Warns

Deadline May Force Italy, Reich Into 'Hands Off' Agreement.

The Situation Abroad.

France warned she would reopen her Spanish border Tuesday, allowing arms and men to move to the assistance of the Spanish government, unless the non-intervention patrol of Spain is restored at once.

Insurgent field commanders reported the Spanish government offensive against the Madrid siege was smashed with heavy losses.

France Sets Deadline.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 10.—France brought pressure on Germany and Italy today to get them to return to full co-operation in the all-European effort to keep the Spanish war from spreading.

She formally notified her fellow members of the 27-nation nonintervention committee she would suspend international control of her Spanish frontier Tuesday unless similar control were restored on the Portuguese-Spanish border.

This control is designed to prevent the flow of arms and men to the warring Spanish factions.

France's announcement did not mean she would open her frontiers immediately to that flow, for officials said the border would remain closed against it, but that French authorities, instead of international control officials, would maintain the barrier.

But diplomats read in the French notification a direct intimation to Rome and Berlin that unless they helped restore the control cordon around Spain, on sea and on land, she would carry out previous threats to return to "normal commercial relations" with the Spanish government.

That would have an important bearing on the civil war, as the French government is friendly to the Madrid-Valencia regime and could become an important source of supply for war materials.

International border control went into effect in both France and Portugal late in March. Recently the Portuguese withdrew facilities for the British control agents who operated along her border by special agreement between Lisbon and London.

Portugal has been friendly to the Spanish insurgents and her territory adjoins that part of Spain under insurgent control.

Britain Works on New Plan.

London, July 10 (AP).—British statesmen worked urgently today to formulate a new plan to isolate the Spanish war, hoping to complete it by Tuesday. France's announcement that international control of her Pyrenese frontier would be suspended Tuesday unless a similar barrier were restored by Portugal made that date a virtual deadline for the next British move.

Report Urges 'Monumental' Flying Field

'Best in World,' Is Aim; Alternate Port Left Up to District.

By James D. Secrest.
Copyright, 1937, by The Washington Post.

The Washington Airport Commission yesterday filed a report simultaneously with the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House recommending Camp Springs, Md., as a site for a monumental airport for the Capital.

Although the report was not made public, because of a comedy of errors, it was learned from an authentic source that the Camp Springs site was designated and that alone. This bears out a story published exclusively in The Washington Post on May 13.

Two members of the commission, it was learned, did not sign the report because of the refusal of the commission to propose that an auxiliary airport be established nearer Washington, either at Washington Airport or at Gravelly Point.

While the commission did not specify that the Federal Government should bear the cost of developing the Camp Springs site, the attitude of the nine-man agency was that this site should form the basis of a national airport which would excel any airport in the world.

Second Field Up to D. C.

The consensus of the commission was that if an auxiliary airport is to be developed, as advocated by a minority of the members, that the District should bear the expense and that it should become a municipal flying field.

Camp Springs is about 10 miles out of Washington on Route 5, between Silver Hill and Clinton, Md. It was selected after Army experts had made surveys of the entire area surrounding Washington under direction of Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, chief of the Air Corps and a Presidential appointee of the commission.

The site was chosen largely because it will be usable in almost all kinds of weather, its sponsors say, and is capable of expansion. Located on a plateau, it will be free of the fogs and floods that beset the airport closer to the Capital.

Minority members of the commission argued, however, that Washington should have an auxiliary site that would be more accessible for use in flights to New York and other Eastern points.

They admitted the value of the Camp Springs site as a terminal for transcontinental flights, but pointed out that the large proportion of commercial flying is done between Eastern points and that the distance of the Camp Springs site would discourage short-haul traffic.

To Retain D. C. Field.

It is understood that if Congress adopts the commission's report and provides funds for a national airport at Camp Springs, Washington Airport will continue to operate as a terminal for air liners flying along the Eastern seaboard.

The commission deliberated for some time, it is understood, over whether it should recommend a dual airport plan with one flying field close in and the other at Camp Springs.

For a while Gen. Westover and Representatives Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, and Cole (Republican), New York, went along with Copeland and Nichols on the dual plan, but finally they sided with the majority in recommending only the one airport.

The commission majority held that it would be going beyond its

Le Mans, France, July 10 (AP).—Nine persons were killed tonight, railroad officials said, when two trains collided in the yards here. Thirty persons were injured. Sen. McCarran Risks Party Ouster, Urges Defeat of Court Bill

Defies 'Farley Mandate' in Plea for Honesty on Measure.

Demands Senators Forget Re-election

By Robert C. Albright.

A grim, impassioned Irishman, who said he spoke under a "death warrant" signed by Postmaster General Farley, yesterday volunteered as No. 1 member of a "Battalion of Death" to kill the compromise court bill.

His Gaelic wit gone, his white mane tossing in defiance, Senator Pat McCarran, of Nevada, was speaking against doctor's orders when he said: "I think the cause is worthy of any man's life."

"I may be delivering my valedictory by reason of the mandate of Mr. Farley," the Nevadan told a packed Senate and galleries laden with sweltering spectators.

"They only want me to crouch beneath their thumb, and if I were remote from this chamber, where language might be otherwise, I would tell them."

Forget Votes, Senate Urged.

Contending the President's court plan will "destroy the Supreme Court," the confidence of the people and commence "destruction of the Government itself," McCarran dared Democratic leaders to throw him out of his party for opposing passage.

He paced back and forth down a narrow aisle of Senate desks. Once he stopped and his eyes swept the chamber. He appealed to Senators to forget thoughts of re-election, and vote as their conscience dicated.

"The time has come for the people of this country to rise in defense of their own Government," he said.

"The time has come for their representatives in House and Senate to stand out and say:

"'I am here today, and that is my verdict. I will do today what conscience dictates for me to do. And if tomorrow I am not here, I will have the satisfaction of knowing that when I was here I did what I believed to be right.'"

Farm Bill Blocked.

It was the fifth day of Senate debate on the compromise court plan. But immediate issues continued to be largely passed over in favor of the intra-party war that has developed in their wake.

The issue of "filibuster" raised on the opening day by Majority Leader Robinson was not again mentioned. Stringent rules invoked to combat it were still in force, sometimes bounding back on the Administration itself.

Once again the opposition blocked introduction by Senator James P. Pope, of Idaho, of a New Deal farm-aid program. The strategy on both sides is to prevent interruption until the court issue is finally disposed of.

Apparently weeks of debate lay ahead. The opposition made no secret of its plan to talk and talk, and prevent any vote unless it weighs in their favor. So closely drawn are the lines that only two or three votes may tell the final story of victory or defeat.

16-Inch Guns To Be Mounted On U. S. Ships

Collapse of Efforts for International Limit Is Announced.

By William V. Nessly.

Collapse of this country's effort to bring about international agreement on a 14-inch limitation for the caliber of guns on navy ships was announced by the State Department yesterday.

As a result, the United States will mount on its two new battleships, now building, the most powerful such weapons known, 16-inch rifles that, the Navy Department says, can hurl 2,700-pound projectiles more than 17 nautical miles.

Failure to obtain agreement on the smaller caliber was made public in a State Department statement, but it had been known for several weeks that Japan had again refused to accept the proposed limitation. The State Department did not mention Japan in its statement.

The statement pointed out that under the London naval treaty of 1936 failure of all the powers that signed the Washington treaty of 1922 to accept the 14-inch limit by April 1 of this year automatically had made 16 inches the limit for caliber.

"However," the Department said, "this Government, not wishing to leave a stone unturned in its effort to maintain the limit of the caliber at the lower level, about June 1, on its own initiative sounded out the governments parties to the Washington naval treaty (Britain, France, Italy and Japan in addition to the United States) to ascertain whether they would be willing to maintain the limit . . . at 14 inches. At the same time, this Government in line with its policy consistently followed, of favoring the principle of reduction of armaments, expressed its entire willingness faithfully to maintain the lower level."

The statement adds:

"With the greatest reluctance, . . . this Government has been obliged to conclude that all other governments have given no assurance of the maintenance of the 14-inch gun level. As a consequence, therefore, guns of a caliber of 16 inches will be mounted on the two battleships for which appropriation has been made and on which construction has begun."

Japanese naval officers are known to have discussed building 40,000-ton battleships carrying 18-inch guns, but in naval circles here the idea is held impractical. The 16-inch weapons are felt to represent the maximum size possible under present construction and technical limitations.

Russians Plan 2 U. S. Flights Within Month

One Plane Ready to Leave Immediately; Chicago May Be Goal.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, July 10.—Soviet Russian aviation leaders tonight disclosed plans to send two more airplanes off on attempted non-stop flights to the United States within a month, probably over the North Polar regions.

One plane is tuned up and ready to go; only rain has held it for several days in Moscow. It will be piloted by Mikhail Gromoff, for many years an outstanding Soviet distance flier. He will have two companions.

Although Gromoff is expected to cross the Arctic regions, he probably will not follow the route of the three men who completed a non-stop jump from Moscow to Vancouver, Wash., June 20. Those three—Valeri Chekaloff, Georgi Baidukoff and Alexander Beliakoff—passed directly over the North Pole, near which the Soviet government has established a scientific camp.

May Try for Chicago.

Gromoff's destination is understood to be Chicago. He may try to make a distance record, surpassing that of Maurice Rossi and Paul Codos, of France, who flew 5,657 miles from New York to Syria in 1933.

The other plane will be piloted by Sigismund Levaneffsky, who attempted a transpolar flight from Moscow to San Francisco in August, 1935.

Levaneffsky disclosed his plan on his return here from Sebastopol, where he tested an American-made plane. He told friends he intended to take off within a month but did not specify his destination.

Flier Denies Arrest.

The famed pilot took the opportunity to deny reports he had been arrested in the recent moves against alleged government enemies. Explaining his absence from the official reception for Dr. Otto Schmidt, leader of the North Polar scientific expedition, when Schmidt returned to Moscow in June, Levaneffsky said he had been busy flying.

Levaneffsky attracted world attention in 1933 when he rescued James E. Mattern, American round-the-world flier who was forced down in Siberia.

President Taking 'Working' Cruise; Rayburn Is Guest

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt abandoned the White House yesterday for a short "working" holiday aboard the yacht Potomac on Chesapeake Bay.

The presence of Representative Rayburn, House floor leader, as a guest prompted some observers to express the belief they intended to discuss a proposal for prolonged recesses of the House during Senate debate of the Supreme Court bill.

Also with the President were James M. Landis, soon to retire as chairman of the Securities Commission, and Mrs. Landis, and members of the White House staff.

With the President went a large accumulation of White House mail and four voluminous reports on which he expected to work during his cruise. He planned to return here late today.

Steel Owners Plan to Reopen Last 3 Plants

Republic Recalls 300 for Monday; Union Files Aluminum Plea.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, July 10 (AP).—Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. laid plans today to reopen its strike-closed Indiana Harbor, Ind., plants, and Republic Steel Corporation went ahead with arrangements to resume operations at Pittsburgh and Cumberland, Md., units.

These plants are the only steel mills remaining idle as a result of the seven-State strike which at its height throttled a sixth of the Nation's steel production and made approximately 100,000 men idle.

"We will open next week at Indiana Harbor," Vice President J. C. Argetsinger of Sheet & Tube said. "Our position is entirely unchanged. We will not sign with anybody. We are obeying the law."

B. F. Handloser, general manager of Republic's Dilworth Porter division at Pittsburgh, said he expected "no difficulty" in reopening that plant Monday to 300 workers.

Atlanta, July 10 (AP).—The Aluminum Co. of America was charged today with "interference and failure to bargain collectively" in connection with labor troubles at its Alcoa, Tenn., plant. Charles N. Feidelson, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, said the charge was signed by Fred Wetmore, president of the Aluminum Workers Union at Alcoa, with whom he conferred.

"An investigation will be made promptly," Feidelson said.

Chicago, July 10 (AP).—Two witnesses testified today before a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner they were hired as "guards" by a detective agency and were told they would be called for duty at the Inland Steel Co. plant in East Chicago, Ind.

Detroit, July 10 (AP).—Intercession of Gov. Frank Murphy was sought tonight to settle a cleaning and dyeing strike and avert another walkout threatening to tie up a major portion of Michigan's trucking facilities. Union truck drivers announced their demands for a minimum-wage scale must be met by Wednesday midnight. If a strike is called, they said, it would affect more than 30,000 workers.

Seattle, July 10 (AP).—Negotiations between the striking American Newspaper Guild and the Seattle Star continued deadlocked tonight, but Publisher E. W. Scripps announced eight strikers voluntarily had returned to work and will be paid for the time they lost. The paper, which was closed last Saturday, published a second consecutive day's editions today under a small police guard.

Pittsburgh, July 10 (AP).—The United Electrical and Radio Workers of America, C. I. O. affiliate, obtained certification today from the National Labor Relations Board as exclusive collective bargaining agency for 11,500 East Pittsburgh employes of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. The union's membership includes 7,200 of the workers.

Canonsburg, Pa., July 10 (AP).—The Continental Can Co. and its subsidiary Standard Tinplate Co. plant will resume operations tomorrow night as a result of a strike settlement reached today. A total of 2,500 employes are affected.

Tampa, Fla., July 10 (AP).—The Saturday holiday in the WPA work week brought a lull today in the attempt of leaders of the Workers Alliance—the WPA union—to call a general strike of 2,000 relief workers.

South Bend, Ind., July 10 (AP).—Striking WPA workers, crying "we all work or no one works," threatened today to end the WPA program in South Bend and St. Joseph County.

Tupelo, Miss., July 10 (AP).—Ida Sledge came back to Tupelo today and defied business men and others to evict her a third time for her activities as a union organizer. Secluded in the "milltown" section, the 28-year-old Memphis society woman said she would remain here pending further orders, despite her ejection last night for the second time in three weeks. Miss Sledge, a Wellesley graduate, said she awaited instructions from the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, C. I. O. affiliate.

M. P. Hanson Is Still 'Cold' From Byrd Expedition of Eight Years Ago.

He is Malcolm P. Hanson, radio engineer at the Anacostia Air Station. His delight in the weather is no mental quirk—it's a handiwork of the fates, the cold-fisted fates that made Hanson quiver in his furs near the South Pole eight years ago and that make him shiver frequently now when he ascends, on business, to the zero-reaching heights of 18,000 and 20,000 feet.

"I like the sun," said Hanson, even while the sun compelled him to wipe his dampened forehead. He looked toward the sun that seemed a murderous ball, and his eyes grew reminiscent.

"Ice," said Hanson . . . "14 months on the ice . . . no sun there for four months . . . On this very day eight years ago I looked at a thermometer and it read 71 degrees below zero." He paused and seemed to think that yesterday was glorious, a day to be set to music.

"Sun Is Beautiful Thing."

"The sun," Hanson went on, "can be a very beautiful thing. As I say we (the first Byrd Antarctic expedition) were on the ice for 14 months . . . you just had to put up with the cold . . . everywhere you looked was white; the ice closed you in . . . You had to watch your step because of the crevasses . . . and once it fell to 72.4 below zero . . . the wind would blow the fine ice and snow in blizzards until it stung your face and hands . . . you seemed to become a part of the ice, after a while. . ."

The process of mind over matter seemed then to operate in Hanson. He appeared almost on the verge of getting cold as he talked.

"Sixty-eight degrees below zero," he said . . . "a party of us went 5 miles from the camp; we walked briskly in our heavy clothing, worked ourselves to perspiration . . . Then when we quieted down the perspiration froze . . . Sometimes it was so cold we could not go out at all, and we sat indoors, thinking of the monotonous ice barrier. . . .

"Drinking water was scare . . . you had to melt snow in buckets . . . it takes a lot of snow to make enough drinking water . . . Of course, a lot of snow was there; pure snow . . . the ice barrier is frozen snow.

"The sun can be a very beautiful thing."

And when the sun first came: "We ran out and stripped ourseleves to the waist to catch what rays we could . . . the air was cold but the rays felt swell . . . everything was cold . . . the heat used to rise remarkably in the houses . . . the men who slept in the lower bunks complained of the cold . . . the men in the upper bunks said the houses were warm enough . . . the thermometer showed that the upper bunks were in zero weather and the lower bunks in weather 35 degrees below . . ."

"Don't picture me as running amuck about the sun, but it can be a very beautiful thing," said Hanson.

It isn't recollection entirely that makes Hanson conclude this and give the sun a pat on the beam. It is the fates that place him in zero weather frequently now. Often, while you're asleep, Hanson is 18,000 or 20,000 feet in the air testing radio equipment. And in these early-morning vigils—where it's something below—he crouches again in furs and considers that the sun is a very beautiful thing.

Interplanetary Talks Forecast By Dr. Tesla for Near Future

Discoverer of Alternating Current, on 81st Birthday, Says 75 Years' Work to Be Used in Cosmic Messages.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 10 (AP).—Interplanetary communication, long a dream of scientific romancers, is due to become a reality in the immediate future, it was promised today by Dr. Nikola Tesla, noted Yugoslavia-born inventor.

So sure is he that he will be the first human to speak with other worlds that Dr. Tesla plans to claim a 100,000-franc prize offered by a French scientific society for the feat, he disclosed.

Calculations and experiments of 75 years' accumulation will be utilized in constructing apparatus to flash the cosmic messages, the aged inventor said.

Dr. Tesla, discoverer of alternating current and numerous other scientific concepts since he came to America in 1884, followed his annual custom of announcing on his birthday the conclusions drawn from the past year's work. He was 81 today.

A cheap radium substitute and new work in the field of cosmic rays were other results of his laboratory labors which he described to those attending a luncheon given in his honor. Officials of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia decorated him with the most coveted medals conferred by their governments.

In the presence of Constantin Fotitch, Yugoslavian minister extraordinary, and Vladimir Hurban, Minister of Czechoslovakia, the inventor said his "think box" was working better than at any time in his long life.

This he ascribed partly to a diet he formulated 40 years ago: 1,000 grains of protein and 1,200 calories daily.

Dr. Tesla paid his respects to partisans of the Einstein relativity theory while explaining his "dynamic theory of gravity," declaring that his discovery will "put an end to idle speculation and false conceptions such as that of 'curved space.'"

But it was to his machine for communicating through interstellar space that Dr. Tesla returned after the luncheon, terming it "the triumph of the age," and the achievement for which his name will be longest remembered.

"I have devoted much of my time during the years past," he said, "to the perfecting of a new small and compact apparatus by which energy in considerable amounts can now be flashed through interstellar space to any distance without the slightest dispersion.

"The money, of course, is a trifling consideration, but for the great historical honor of being the first to achieve this miracle I would be almost willing to give my life.

"I am just as sure of my discovery and my proof of it as if I had that prize money in my pocket already."

according to police. The victim, who lives in the first block of Florida avenue northwest, was taken to Casualty Hospital, where he was treated for cuts and shock as well as heat prostration.

Six prostrations were recorded here, while one man was in a serious condition from a swimming injury.

Scattered thunderstorms temporarily cooled suburban areas.

When President Roosevelt boarded the yacht Potomac at Annapolis, he could expect small surcease, with highs of 98 reported from Salisbury and Cambridge, on the Eastern Shore. Rocky Mount, N. C., led the Nation with 103, while Richmond and Hagerstown, Md., reported 96.

Deaths by drowning, freak storms, automobile accidents and just plain heat continued to rise as the wave covered the Nation from Nebraska to Boston, from New Orleans to Michigan. New York led the toll with 31 fatalities, a 95-degree level jamming suburban highways and beaches with seething vacationers. In Maryland, with a 95-degree high at Baltimore, two deaths were recorded. A heavy squall doused Chicago's South Side, where five deaths were recorded, and flood waters in Belle Fourche, S. Dak., drove 100 residents from their homes, according to the Associated Press.

Mrs. Pearl Fisher, 31, of 3612 Austin street southeast, was taken to Casualty Hospital suffering from heat prostration and later removed to Homeopathic Hospital. John Lee, of 1515 Seventh street northwest, was taken to Casualty Hospital when he was overcome by heat, and Vivian Duncan, colored, 22, of 431 Twenty-second street northwest, Women's Auxiliary of the Ameri- organization work.

President Sorry Morris Must Quit as Envoy

More than five months after it was submitted, more than a month after it was accepted and ten days after his successor had been named, the letter of resignation of Dave Hennen Morris as Ambassador to Belgium was made public yesterday, along with a reply from President Roosevelt.

On January 20 Ambassador Morris wrote to the President sending his "formal resignation, which is usual at the beginning of a new Presidential term," and recalling a talk with the President last summer and more recent letters in which the ambassador "explained that I really must return to my work with the Macy Foundation, the Research Corporation and the Medical School." He thanked the President "for all your co-operation and thoughtfulness" and expressed the hope "that I have not failed you in any way."

On July 1 the President sent to the Senate the nomination of Hugh S. Gibson, then Ambassador to Brazil, to be Ambassador to Belgium.

The exchange of correspondence made public yesterday by the State Department revealed that on June 4 Mr. Roosevelt had written Ambassador Morris saying he had been "extremely sorry to receive your letter of January 20" and recalling that in the conversation of last year he had expressed the hope Morris might be able to continue to serve at Brussels.

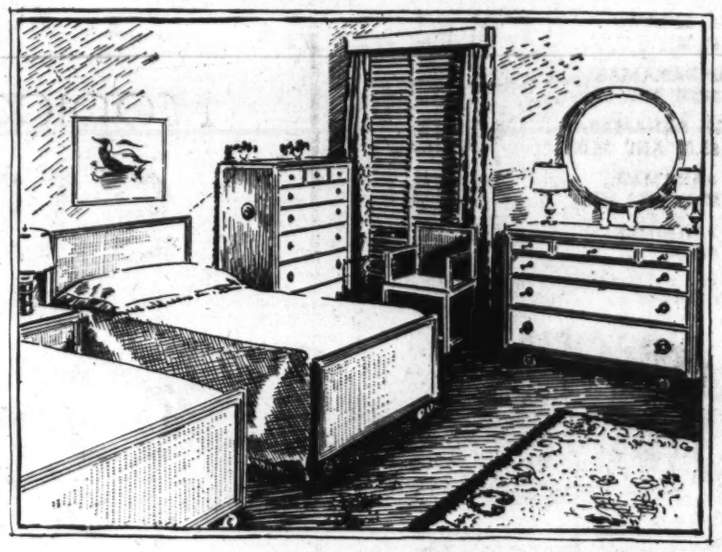
Revival of the true British Colonial

Modern, you say? Yes and no—but really no. This type is to the British Colonial era what our own American Colonial is to us here in the new America. The Colonial British furniture serves a very definite demand today from those who hestitate to choose the 20th Century Modern because it is so dramaticaly modern; but who really like the modern flare which the British Colonial so subtly presents.

As always Sloane's is the first to present the new features—and here they are—Bedroom and Dining Room Groups—having their first presentation in Washington.



The Bedroom Group

Developed in maple with the colorful bamboo finish. The soft blending of the graining, the interesting, bright yet reposing color of the specially designed hardware are strikingly effective. The drawers are graded in size which gives a very smart appearance to the front of each case.

The British Colonial design will adapt itself readily to any home, introducing a note that is distinctly different and vividly attractive. Complete in eight pieces, including twin beds..... $495

The Dining Room Group

Developed in genuine Honduras mahogany. The design of each piece is reflective of the Colonial British motif. The chairs have a sense of solidity, yet are quaint with their rush made seats, their simplicity relieved only by individual brass feet that are applied on the two front legs. The table is round and of a size that can be used in apartments or dining rooms where space is limited. The sideboard and china cabinet have been designed to give the utmost practical service with ample drawer and cupboard space. The server has open shelf and long drawer. Group complete with ten pieces..... $495

Wirephoto: Hollywood's "Mystery Man" Shows Golf Form at Jail

Copyright by the Associated Press.

John Montague, famed as one of the greatest golfers in the world, whose aversion to being photographed led to an investigation by up-State New York police and his detention at Los Angeles on a warrant sworn out by detectives of the eastern State, held a field day for cameramen at the county jail in Los Angeles. In three poses above he shows his golfing form; the drive, the grip and the putt. His renown has been spread as the game's "longest driver" and "most uncanny" putter. He never entered tournaments and never permitted photographers to make his picture. When they did attempt to "steal" a shot he promptly destroyed the holders and films, always paying for the damage he caused.

'Garbo of Golf,' Accused Bandit, Freed on Bond

Oliver Hardy Rejected as Guarantor; N. Y. Asks Extradition.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 10.—Golfdom's incredible John Montague won temporary freedom from jail today on $10,000 bond as the State of New York demanded his extradition on a seven-year-old robbery charge.

Film Comedian Oliver Hardy offered to sign the bond for his former house guest, but was disqualified. E. A. Ralston, Hollywood building contractor, and F. S. Calendar, friends of "Mysterious Monty," guaranteed the bond.

Municipal Judge Arthur Guerin set the bond, overruling a motion by Deputy District Attorney Hinshaw for bail of $25,000.

Hinshaw created a furor when he exclaimed:

"This man has been a fugitive from New York for nearly seven years, during which time he has shown signs of some affluence with no visible means of support.

"The officers in this case believe he may know something of recent robberies here."

Stockily-built Montague, the "Garbo of golf," sat quietly as the case was argued. He waved affably to a coterie of friends seated behind him.

George Clark, one of his attorneys and long a golfing associate at the exclusive film colony club to which Montague belongs, advised Gov. Frank F. Merriam in Sacramento he would ask for a hearing when formal extradition papers arrive from the East.

Leaving the cell where he spent the night, Montague, whose real name was disclosed as La Verne Moore, was willing to talk on almost any subject except two—the charge he participated in the holdup of a roadhouse with three others near Jay, N. Y., in 1930; and the source of his money.

Long Hike to Give Book to Roosevelt Ends in Capital

Carrying a copy of Plato's "Republic" and an autograph book full of famous names, Emanuel Jonidis, cross-country hiker, was back in Washington yesterday.

Twenty-eight days out of New York, he arrived here in the name of the Greek-American Citizens' Club of New York to present the leather-bound and gilt-edged Plato volume to President Roosevelt as a "token of esteem."

Jonidis was here two summers ago, pushing a wheelbarrow, the same which he had used in 1932 to carry a 60-pound stone from Litchfield, Conn., to Los Angeles, "to express my happiness over Franklin D. Roosevelt's election."

Jonidis tramped over more than 700 miles campaigning for President Roosevelt through Connecticut and New York last summer. He expects to appear at the White House Monday.

Between hikes Jonidis lives in New York, where, he says, he gets enough WPA work to provide for his wife and three children.

Branch Predicts Gains in Air Mail

By the Associated Press.

Harllee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General, predicted yesterday domestic air-mail service would be self-sustaining in two years. He said a $13,000,000 deficit to the Postoffice Department in the 1933 fiscal year had been cut to $984,000.

Branch predicted the trans-Pacific routes would reduce their present estimated $1,000,000 annual deficit and proposed service across the Atlantic might be self-sustaining by 1939.

On Capitol Hill

Diplomatic Appointments and Transfers Long Awaited, Are Being Made Rapidly.

LONG-AWAITED DIPLOMATIC appointments and shifts are coming rapidly, now that the dam has been broken.

The Senate yesterday received from President Roosevelt the nomination of George A. Gordon, of New York, to be minister to the Netherlands. Gordon, a career diplomat, has been minister to Haiti since June, 1935.

In his new post he will succeed Grenville T. Emmett, who has been named minister to Austria, succeeding George A. Messersmith, who becomes Assistant Secretary of State.

Gordon is a native of Alabama and was educated at Harvard and Columbia, later practising law.

EXPOSITIONS ARE HAILED as an indication of prosperity, and the world seems to be becoming exposition-conscious.

The United States has a commission and exhibit at the Paris Exposition now under way.

The Cleveland Exposition of last year is being given a re-run this summer.

Congress has authorized and appropriated for governmental participation in the New York Exposition to be held in 1939.

And yesterday President Roosevelt signed legislation providing assistance in staging the San Francisco Exposition, also two years hence. The measure calls for appropriation of $1,500,000.

Immediate title to land bought with Government aid by farm tenants is provided in a compromise worked out by a joint Senate and House committee. It would leave to the Secretary of Agriculture the controverted point of establishing a Farmers Home Corporation to supervise the Government loans.

The measure authorizes lending of $10,000,000 this fiscal year, $25,000,000 in the next, and $50,000,000 each following year. It bars resale of the land by the borrower for five years in order to prevent land speculation.

Appropriation of $10,000,000 this year and $20,000,000 in each of two subsequent years also is authorized for purchase and retirement of submarginal land.

DEBATE ON THE AIR over Federal control of wages and hours is to be engaged in by Senator Hugo L. Black (Democrat), Alabama, and James A. Emery, of the National Association of Manufacturers, it was said at Black's offices yesterday.

The debate, before the Institute of Public Affairs at Charlottesville, Va., next Thursday, is to be broadcast nationally.

Elks Open National Convention in Denver

Robbery Suspect Captured Before Police Get Call

Before police had been notified of the holdup, a taxicab driver, his 6-year-old daughter and an unidentified man captured a colored man whom spectators said had just robbed the Howard Cleaners & Dyers store at Seventh and G streets.

The driver, Robert Lee Huffman, of 1121 Fourth street southwest, said he was passing Seventh and F streets with his daughter, Dora Mae, riding beside him, when an excited bystander pointed at a fleeing colored man and said he had just robbed the store. Huffman drove after him, turning up an alley, and cornered him. There another man, whose name was not learned, helped him capture the fugitive.

The man said his name was James Tyler, 20. Store officials said $19.80 had been taken. Police said they found $19 in a paper bag Tyler was carrying.

Passersby grabbed a 14-year-old colored boy whom they said helped in the holdup.

THIS new portable organ-like instrument conforms to the standards and recommendations of the American Guild of Organists as adopted in May, 1933. Its tones are natural and normally produced. Organ literature can be played as written. The model pictured is a five-stop, single-expression, duplexed, two-manual and full 32-note pedal clavier instrument, and looks, sounds and plays like a pipe organ! It is capable of the rich tone quality associated with the church, but new tonalities and an entirely new action make it the ideal instrument for public and private entertainment. The price is $1,415, on easy terms.

Real Comfort

Last winter—in the South American tropics—CARRIER engineers were busy perfecting the new Portable Unit. They emerged with the sensation of 1937 air conditioning. The unit operates without any pipe connections—on either A. C. or D. C. current—you plug in, snap a switch and relax . . . That's real comfort!

These months of July and August are hot and humid. For a reasonable cost you can have "weather by Carrier" installed in your home or your office.

Merger of U. S. Law Enforcing Agencies Urged

Brookings Report to Byrd Recommends Shifting Activities to F. B. I.

Centralization of all general law-enforcement activities of the Federal Government in the Department of Justice was recommended yesterday by the Brookings Institution, in a 70,000-word report to the special Senate Reorganization Committee.

The report, released by Chairman Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia, committee head, stressed the necessity of two transfers—the shift to the Bureau of Investigation of the Justice Department of the criminal-law enforcement activities of both the Secret Service division of the Treasury and the Postoffice Inspectors of the Postoffice Department.

"Feud" Recognized.

Indirect recognition of the behind-the-scenes but long-smoldering feud between the Secret Service and the F. B. I. was noted in the reports following observations:

"Among a few agencies jealousy and antagonism exist . . . The unfavorable conditions that exist at present might be in large part removed if the President were to instruct the heads of the law enforcement agencies not only to refrain from sniping tactics but also to get togeher at least monthly for an informal discussion of their common problems.

"Some of the difficulty at present appears to be due to the fact that different agencies follow different practices with respect to publicity, propaganda, promotion and the public giving of credit to other agencies."

Study Recommended.

The report also recommended the study of the Bureau of Customs and the Immigration and Naturalization Service with a view to local consolidations and local interchanges of personnel and work.

Minor suggestions included centralization in the F. B. I., in the main, of law enforcement officer training; further study of centralization of identification work, of powers of arrest, and of rearrangement of office space; and transfer to the F. B. I. of all Secret Service activities other than protection of the

The institution, recognizing "the fear that a strong Federal police force might be used as an instrument of oppression," nevertheless insisted that if crime is to be viewed as a national problem, "division of leadership and responsibility is not desirable."

The Postilion Hitch-Hiker Writes of Kansas City

Notes on 'The Heart of America.'

KANSAS CITY, MO., July 11.—Kansas City is a queer place. It's called Kansas City, yet the greater part of it is in Missouri. It has one of the most brazen political machines in the country and one of the finest middle class residential sections.

TOM McCARTHY.

Everybody reads the Kansas City Star, and nobody votes as the Star urges. It is one of the most wide-open towns in the country, and yet it rarely has a gang murder.

Everybody admires H. F. McElroy, the city manager, and nobody likes him. He is the representative of the Pendergast machine, and yet he has his own way when he wants it, because he acts quickly.

There are a lot of funny things about Kansas City, Mo., and it's a hard town to understand. People who have lived there all their lives tell you that they can't understand it.

Even the people on the streets are a contradiction. They don't look like Missourians or Kansans either. Placed on certain corners of Kansas City, you would think yourself in New York or Washington. The population is cosmopolitan.

I talked with a young Britisher, born near Cambridge, who had lived in Boston before coming to Missouri. He told me that there was no comparison. He was going to spend the rest of his days in Kansas City.

* * * *

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE likes to call Kansas City the "Heart of America." For the past many months now the "Heart" has been beating as if from an overdose of adrenalin. The election-fraud disclosures continue, and the second grand jury seems headed toward bringing the indictment score near the two hundred mark.

It is believed that the second grand jury will remain in session until fall. The game in Kansas City now is to turn to the paper and see if your Cousin Jake or Uncle Ed have been indicted.

They've indicted an average group of citizens, and young wives have followed hardened wardheelers on the stand. Among those under indictment are a city building inspector and the policeman who had been assigned as the chauffeur to the city manager.

Thus far, being indicted has meant pretty serious consequences. There have been 46 convictions and no acquittals. The funny part of it is that there was no need for an election fraud. The Pendergast machine swept Kansas City overwhelmingly. Boss T. J. Pendergast was ill at the time and wasn't around to see how things were going, and "the boys," it is alleged, phoneyed the election returns so they'd get an extra pat on the head for the results in their district.

* * * *

MAYBE IT wasn't exactly that, however. The Pendergast machine has been having its own way in Kansas City, and possibly the boys were getting tired of the lack of competition.

In one District the returns showed 825 votes for Roosevelt and 144 for Landon. The boys weren't satisfied to win. They were now playing "high score." The investigation revealed they simply lifted a hundred votes and made the result 925 for Roosevelt and 44 for Landon.

They weren't particularly subtle in changing the votes. It was just sort of an afterthought. Something to be taken care of after the polls had closed, and a man could relax, light a cigar and take off his shoes.

In one District, where the polling place was in a church building, they took the ballots down behind the pulpit in order to "fix them up." In another district, they registered a group of "ghost" voters from an address which turned out to be the salesroom for a tombstone company.

There have been interesting disclosures in the prosecution of the vote fraud in Kansas City and a lot of people have gone to jail for a couple of months or a couple of years, but nobody expects it'll make any difference, which is another of the strange things about Kansas City.

* * * *

WHEN ELECTION frauds make the papers in Kansas City, that's interesting, but not too unexpected. When strikes come into the headlines, that is news. Kansas City has been what the union organizers call a "scab town." There just wasn't any unionization. A few months ago the drive began, and it's interesting in that it reveals that the struggle for unionization, which has made headlines in industrial centers, is now sweeping into one of the last strongholds of the non-union shop.

Reporters, who have been covering the town for years, say that there have been more strikes in the last three months than in the preceding ten years. They estimate that there are now between five and six thousand workers unemployed as the direct result of strikes.

This is something so new for Kansas City that businessmen who can tolerate a corrupt political machine have become somewhat hysterical over the situation. They've formed an association for the protection of property and the enforcement of law. Thus far, they have merely demanded protection from the city government.

There has been some violence. Windows have been broken in simple acts of vandalism, but the situation hasn't been as bad as on other strike fronts. The city manager, McElroy, made a statement, after much urging, that laws would be enforced, and some contractors in the affected building trades reported their workmen had returned 100 per cent, the fear of violence having been removed.

With the local C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. unions holding hands to insure that they won't be slugged by the other unawares, the Kansas City businessmen are holding their breath and hoping it all comes out for the best, as the tide of labor unrest surges past a milestone into Kansas City.

* * * *

ANOTHER FEATURE of Kansas City is its variety. Even if you're not interested in the workings of a corrupt political machine or the flare-up of strikes in a non-union town, you might be interested in the bars or the gambling houses. They close the bars on Sunday, and they close the gambling houses when the customers get tired. Pendergast is a leading wholesale liquor dealer in the town.

Probably every night club and bar in town has at least one, and normally three, slot machines.

If you really want to gamble, go down Twelfth street in the heart of town. You'll find real gambling houses there, easily entered through two or three entrances. There may not be big games, such as you'll find in Chicago, New York or Miami, but they're not so small either.

Also, they offer a fairly good variety, ranging from dice and slot machines to roulette.

It's a funny town, Kansas City, and a hard town to figure out.

McCarranRisks 'PoliticalDeath' On Court Issue

present time is far short of the 54 votes it claims. Three names, hitherto believed for the bill, yesterday were definitely added to the doubtful column. They were Senators Andrews, of Florida; Overton, of Louisiana, and Russell, of Georgia.

As it stood yesterday, the Senate division appeared to be: For the plan, 43; against the plan, 44, and doubtful, 9.

Suggestion for further compromise came yesterday from some members hitherto identified with the substitute. Although it was not formally proposed, one plan discussed would postpone the effective date of the one-judge-a-year substitute for one or possibly two years.

This apparently was put forward to meet amendments offered by McCarran to exempt present members of the court from operation of the plan. But bitter-end opponents are against even this, and "perfecting" amendments they have offered have been put forward principally to gain speaking time. Senators may speak twice only on the bill, and twice on each amendment.

O'Mahoney Scheduled.

Only two members of the opposition have spoken, once each—Senators Wheeler, of Montana, and McCarran. Senator O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, is expected to take up the attack when the Senate resumes tomorrow noon. One leader of the opposition said the plan is for one opponent to speak each day for the remaining weeks of July. No "test" votes of any sort are expected for two or three weeks, and they may be only of a perfunctory nature.

Hot weather was beginning to take its toll on both sides of the question. Senator Norris, of Nebraska, lukewarm for the bill, has been forced by illness to leave town. Senator Shipstead, of Minnesota, irrevocably against the substitute, said he is here against physician's advice, and expects to leave.

There was talk of others leaving, and the question of maintaining a quorum may become a real problem. Without a quorum, the Senate would have to adjourn if the question were raised, and such a motion is not debatable.

"Promethean Fire."

Following Wheeler's icy, sarcastic onslaught of Friday, McCarran's appeal was high-pitched and often emotional. But it reached eloquent heights that led Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, orginal court bill sponsor, to say his lips were "touched with Promethean fire" of Ireland's oratory.

McCarran drew analogy repeatedly with foreign "dictatorships" and warned:

"There is a philosophy that gave sanction to this bill, a rampant philosophy that is going the rounds of this country, that if it starts with sufficient fury will sweep this country off its feet. Because today, from without, there come the enemies, enemies greater than any army that ever challenged our existence."

He said the court bill might prove an "entering wedge" for dictatorships like those that wiped out the rights of labor in Germany and Italy. He said organized labor should join at once in the fight to prevent enlargement of the Supreme Court "because it might be too late tomorrow."

Farley's "Dagger."

Many times the Nevadan referred to remarks by Democratic National Chairman Farley on the court stand of himself and other Senators. He said Farley drove a "dagger into my heart" when he said in effect: "When you ask for something for your State, there will be a different viewpoint." He said that statement "wrote my death warrant."

"I do not think the hour has come," said McCarran, "when members of our party can cast off and say, 'Because you exercise the judgement God Almighty gave you, therefore you are to be read out of the Democratic Party.'

"If that be the theme and theory, and if those who stand under the leadership of the Senator from Montana (Wheeler), as I do, are to be read out of the party by reason of the fact that we seek to hold democracy safe in the new world, that it may guide the old world out of a torn condition—if that be the theory, that we cannot exercise our individual judgment, then I am ready still to stand by the side of the Senator from Montana."

"I would rather go down holding the helm of the ship of State safe through these troubled waters than I would to return to the Senate of the United States, notwithstanding the fact that that is an honor not second even to the Presidency, as I view it."

Hands in his coat pockets, McCarran wheeled and said there was an "honor even higher than that."

"Do you," he said, "remember the lines: 'In those ancient days, to be a Roman citizen was greater than to be a king?' In this modern day, to be an American citizen, regardless of party lines, is greater than to be a President, greater than to be a member of a dominant party controlling the destiny of a nation.

"Because the hour is coming, Mr. President—the hour is coming, sirs—when you and I will be called upon in no uncertain terms to say whether or not the seeds of destruction being sown in this Government today from afar are to take root and blossom and bloom into a fruition that will poison the atmosphere of the world."

President "Too Grand."

He said this "rampant philosophy" does not come from the President, and it was hard for him to believe the court bill came from the President—"he is too big, too grand, too splendid."

The Nevadan paused now and then to slap at the compromise bill, which he declared "worse than the proposal to place new permanent members on the Supreme bench."

At one point, Senator Burke, of Nebraska, asked if the plan did not call for two types of judges on the bench, "regular and substitutes."

"I can only answer by saying perhaps we may be justified in calling them 'quasi-judges'," McCarran replied.

Later he said the bill provides for "ad interim" judges—"ad interim in that they will serve as coadjutors until the ones for whom they pinch-hit are called beyond, or retired." He declared no man could accept one of the new posts without stultifying himself, and America would wait "with anxiety" for the name of such a man.

He said the bill was intended to affect decisions "in a way that is intolerable to our form of government." He said that "by indirection the executive branch of the Government would place a veto against the will and judgment of one sitting in the Supreme Court of the United States, whose skill and judgment should be free."

President Opposed Increase.

Wheeler asked the Nevadan if the President's own former words in opposition to a court increase had not been used by Democratic candidates in the last campaign in answer to Republican charges. McCarran said he had used them himself.

He said he was called to New York headquarters and assigned to campaign through the Northwest, which was "not so sure" at that time for the Democrats. He said he was told to stand on the Democratic platform, and he did so.

"Oh, Mr. President," he continued, "they did not say to me then, 'when you ask for something from your State, there will be a different viewpoint!'"

McCarran recalled that Ashurst, now an ardent supporter of the court plan, before it was proposed made a speech in the Senate against tampering with the courts. Ashurst asked him to yield. With the strictest debating rules now obtaining, unanimous consent of the Senate was necessary before Ashurst could speak more than a question.

'Once I studied shorthand, and was just a ham shorthand reporter," said Ashurst. "The first sentence I had to write was, 'He thrust his fist against a post and still insists he sees a ghost.' With all his wonderful oratory, my able friend from Nevada simply thrusts his fist against a post, and still insists he sees a ghost."

As the Senate's fifth day of debate closed, Speaker Bankhead, in the House, discussed what he called an "exploratory" plan under which the House might recess indefinitely until the Senate concluded the court bill debate.

The United States Chamber of Commerce, in its "Washington Review," predicted the Administration's entire legislative program "may become endangered if a legislative snarl develops out of protracted and bitter debate on the court plan."

The chamber said the compromise bill "is no less objectionable than the original proposal."

"The principle involved is the same," it said.

Japanese Spies Infest Siberia, Soviet Charges

'Wrecking' Followed Sale of Railway, Claim; 3 More Leaders Seized.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, July 10.—Pravda, organ of the Communist Party, declared today Japan took advantage of Russia's sale of the Chinese Eastern Railway in 1935 to establish an espionage system in the Soviet Far East.

Pravda's article was designed to throw light on the wave of executions in Far Eastern Siberia, especially among railway workers. Pacific Star, newspaper published at Khabarovsk, has listed 217 such executions in the Far East in recent weeks.

The Chinese Eastern Railway, built by the tsarist regime across northern Siberia nearly 40 years ago, was sold to Japan's protectorate, Manchukuo, by an agreement signed in Tokyo in March, 1935. Thousands of Russians employed by the line, including many high executives, returned to the Soviet Union.

Hostile to Soviets.

Many of these, although Soviet citizens, actually were hostile to the Moscow regime and Japan recruited them as her agents, Pravda declared. It added they returned to Russian territory to carry on espionage, sabotage and wrecking.

"Japan availed herself of the circumstance that the former employes belonged to hostile social groups but were able to enter the Soviet Union," Pravda declared. "The secret police recently revealed a number of such agents."

Pacific Star, in the issue reaching Moscow today, announced the arrests of three heads of Soviet agriculture in the Far East for alleged conspiracy to sabotage crops as an aid to "Japanese conquest." The man were Chermanoff, Khavkin and Vasilevitch.

Sold Out to Japan.

They "sold the Far East to Japan," Pacific Star declared, and tried to wreck the Soviet Union's vast projects for Far Eastern colonization.

Latest sabotage denunciations turned to the state bank. Economic Life, organ of the finance commissariat, charged that Livefimovitch Mariasine, former vice commissar of finance and president of the bank, removed from both posts a year ago, had aided "enemies of the people." His offense was said to have been sabotaging in 1931 a plan for improving the bank's circulation and reserves. No mention was made of his present status or whereabouts.

Camp Springs Airport Urged By Commission

Use of Disputed District Field Is 'Up to Pilots,' Roper Declares.

As a result of the commission's decision, the perennial fight between advocates of Washington Airport and Gravelly Point may continue. The commission will concentrate for the present, however, on establishing the major flying field in nearby Maryland.

The Camp Springs site is ample enough for almost any development that Congress should wish. While part of the land is under option, reputedly for 60 days, some of it may have to be obtained by condemnation, it is understood.

Quick Action Needed.

Congress will have to act upon the report at the current session of Congress if the options are to be of any value. An appropriation of $10,000 was given the commission for placing options and paying expert advisers.

The commission's report is the result of 14 months' investigation and study. It is the outgrowth of an exhaustive hearing held a year and a half ago by a sub-committee of the House District Committee. Two of the members of this sub-committee. Representatives Nichols and Cole, are members of the commission.

When the report was filed yesterday about noon, newspapermen found themselves confronted with a dual obstacle of a Saturday half holiday and a Senate filibuster.

One report was filed with Speaker Bankhead, and although the Speaker stated he had no objection to making it public his employes received no release before Bankhead left on a fishing trip.

Senator King, chairman of the commission, filed a report simultaneously in the Senate, but he was told by the President pro tem. the Senate would have to decide whether the report should be made public and printed.

Release Contrary to Ruling.

When King arose at the end of a long address by Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, on the court reform bill and asked unanimous consent to have the report released and printed, Minority Leader McNary objected on the ground that it would constitute a transaction of business by the Senate and that would be contrary to rulings by the chair.

As a consequence, the Senate may not make the report public for several weeks, or months, whereas the House is expected to release it immediately upon convening tomorrow.

Members of the commission, bound to secrecy, refused to discuss the report until it was released either by the President pro tem. of the Senate or the Speaker.

The report, while it has been impatiently awaited since convening of the Seventy-fifth Congress, will not immediately settle Washington's eight-year-old airport controversy, if for no other reason than that even if its recommendations are enacted, a landing field must be available while the new one is being built and developed.

Accordingly, a considerable stir was raised yesterday when the Department of Commerce enunciated a "hands off" policy with regard to flying hazards at Washington Airport.

Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper said landings and take-offs at the Capital's field "must remain a responsibility of the pilot."

Aware of Deficiencies.

"There appears to be no recently developed hazard in sight that has not been and is not capable of being cared for," Roper asserted, virtually giving Washington Airport a clean bill of health despite the threat of transport air line pilots to shun the field altogether if alleged landing and take-off dangers are not eliminated within 60 days.

David L. Behncke, president of the Air Line Pilots Association, which delivered the ultimatum to Fred D. Fagg, jr., Air Commerce director, asserted last night that Roper's statement "does not clarify the situation."

"What the pilots want," he said, "is a code of hard and fast standards of safe operation at the field, so that the question of whether or not it is safe to land or take off from the field is not left to snap judgment of the pilot when so many different factors, such as load, wind direction, temperature, etc., enter into the situation."

Do Not Want Responsibility.

He reaffirmed the union's argument that pilots should be relieved of the responsibility placed on their shoulders by both the Federal Government and their employers of having to rely entirely on their own judgment as to whether conditions are favorable for take offs and landings.

"There is danger," according to Behncke, "that pilots may be unduly influenced by their employers to attempt landing and take offs that might result in serious accidents.

"Our original statement is unaltered. The association is of the opinion that the District of Columbia Airport should be immediately rated as a one-runway field for D. C. 2 and D. C. 3 equipment and that a definite rating based on wind direction and weather conditions should be graded by the Bureau of Air Commerce without further delay, when this type of equipment is being used.

"Such safety standards should govern definitely when the field should be used as a one-runway field or not be used at all. Until this is done, the pilots decline to be responsible in case of accident and the time to take action to insure safety is before accidents, not afterward. Where the protection of human life is a paramount factor, nothing should be left to chance."

In his statement, Secretary Roper asknowledged the bureau "has long been aware of the deficiencies of the Washington-Hoover Airport and has been instrumental in increasing its factors of safety."

He cited the department's authority to control all interstate operations of scheduled airlines and the policy of American Airlines and Eastern Air Lines in giving their pilots full discretion in clearing to Washington Airport and making landings and take-offs there.

"Furthermore," he said, "by the general provisions of the air commerce regulations, all scheduled airline pilots are authorized to use their discretion in any case of landing or take-off.

"Therefore, in the present instance, it seems that all necessary safety precautions have been taken."

He re-emphasized the point in commenting on the action of the Air Line Pilots Association.

Pilots Have Freedom.

"Any landings or take-offs made within the next 60 days at the airport mentioned must remain a responsibility of the pilot who is fully authorized to determine whether or not the conditions at the port and at the time do or do not create a hazard," Roper said.

He promised that the Air Bureau "will give extra consideration to the recommendations of the air line pilots using this airport." Then he reminded that the Secretray of Commerce does not locate or design airports, but only specifies conditions under which they may be used.

Meantime, Manager Samuel J. Solomon, of Washington Airport, and a high-ranking official of one of the two airlines involved in the pilots' "ultimatum," dismissed reports that a serious investigation into the field's facilities has been launched by Associated Aviation Underwriters.

No Inquiry Mentioned.

Both said they had spoken Friday with Dan Scarritt, of the underwriters, who made no mention of any plans for any extraordinary survey. They also pointed out that insurance companies are continually conducting routine investgations and that it would only be natural for them to take notice of the airport row here.

Solomon also minimized Baltimore's reported attempts to take advantage of the impasse by trying to slice off some of the Capital's commercial aviation business. That is, to induce through lines to make Baltimore one of their stops, instead of Washington.

"Baltimore has had a field just as long as us," the airport manager said, "and if the business hasn't gone there up to now, it won't start now. It seems simple to me. Washington can furnish the volume; Baltimore can't."

Ralph Damon, vice president of American Airlines in charge of operations, said that if his company has received any proposals from the Baltimore Association of Commerce or any other agency from that city he hasn't heard about it.

Scottsboro Trial to Open.

Experimenter Dies; He Gargled Poison Instead of Polish

Because he believed the automobile polish he manufactured "not wisely but too well," Samuel Wright, 46, of 1225 O street northwest, is dead.

Convinced of his product's purity, Wright, according to Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, resolved to try it out on his teeth. So, when he went to his bath and shave, he took what he thought was polish for a mouth wash. He gargled, then collapsed on the floor.

Rushed to Emergency Hospital, he died four hours later. Dr. MacDonald investigated.

He discovered that Wright had not used the polish, but had swallowed poison. MacDonald issued a certificate of accidental death.

Riot Spreads As Paris Hotel Workers Strike

Dozen Large Hostelries, Many Cafes Closed by 3 Unions.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 10.—Outbreaks of violence tonight accompanied the spread of a strike by hotel, restaurant and cafe workers demanding an unconditional five-day week.

A dozen of the largest Paris hotels and more than a hundred cafes and restaurants were strike-bound when committees of the affiliated unions called their workers out except in establishments already on a 40-hour, 5-day week.

One big boulevard hotel said most of its guests left when the strike was declared. Its American guests, however, preferred to stay even though they had to prepare their own meals and make up their own rooms. One big Champs Elysee cafe kept running despite the strike, staffed by its manager and hat check girl.

Most of the disorders were created when roving squadrons of strikers attempted to call out employes of eating places that remained open although listed on the strike roll.

Emergency police squads restored order in one cafe after an employe was injured, and Mobile Guards were stationed near the large hotels and cafe-lined boulevards.

Twenty strikers smashed bottles and hurled chairs in a restaurant in the financial district until police squads ejected them. They returned with reinforcements but police blocked the entrances.

The employers' syndicate warned they would try to offset the strike by shutting their doors rather than modify the general accord of July 2, reached through government mediation, which established an approximate 5½-day week.

Premier Camille Chautemps, who has endeavored personally to reconcile the workers' and employers' demands, planned to continue arbitration conferences.

Letter Clew Fails In Parsons Case

Stony Brook, N. Y., July 10 (AP).—District Attorney L. Barron Hill said today Albert D. Osborn, handwriting expert of the Lindbergh kidnap case, had failed to identify the writing in the $25,000 ransom note found after Mrs. Alice McDonell Parsons, Long Island society matron, vanished June 9.

Hill said Osborn examined the note and various specimens of writing, gathered by Suffolk County authorities and submitted to him for comparison with the note.

Assistant District Attorney Lindsay Henry said he would confer with Inspector Harold R. King, of Nassau County, on the possibility of making an aerial survey of the north shore of Long Island to look for Mrs. Parson's body. Hill said Osborn had concluded the writing in the note was not Mrs. Parsons', and said his men were working on the assumption that she was slain and her body hidden.

Snell Charges 'Plot' by Farley And Roosevelt

Demands Investigation of Convention Book Sales to Corporations.

By Sidney Olson.

Representative Bertrand H. Snell (Republican), New York, declared yesterday he had information which named "the President of the United States and the Postmaster General as parties to a scheme of evasion perfected and applied through the Democratic National Committee."

The bald, aggressive House minority leader introduced a resolution concurrent to this charge, demanding an investigation, by a special committee, of the alleged sale to corporations of President Roosevelt's personally-autographed edition of the Democratic campaign book of 1936, at $250 per copy.

A section of the act, he said, "expressly declares it unlawful for 'any corporation whatever' to make a contribution to any campaign involving Presidential electors."

President's Signature Used.

A letter of solicitation from a Democratic National Committee agent, inserted as part of his resolution, he said "states boldly that the sale of the President's autographed edition enables the committee to legally accept corporation checks."

He listed the following items of evidence which he was prepared to place before an investigating committee:

"A purported photostatic copy of the sales contract promising delivery of the President's autographed edition at $250 the copy;

"A purported photostatic copy of the Democratic national committee's letter of solicitation;

"An affidavit from a business man who, when he declined to purchase $500 of these books, was subjected to various threats and measures of intimidation by officers and agents of the Resettlement Administration;"

"Other material which has come to me from several States purporting to disclose sales methods and attempted coercion of corporations by agents of the Democratic national committee;

"Circumstantial evidence that lists of corporations doing routine business with various agencies of the United States Government were furnished to the Democratic national committee as 'prospect lists' for book salesmen;

"Evidence that in at least one Federal jurisdiction formal complaint against attempted coercion in the sale of these books was placed before the United States district attorney, with no legal action resulting therefrom;

"A list of corporations in at least 15 States which already have made substantial contributions to the Democratic national committee through this device of evasion."

Accuses Farley of Plan.

Snell recalled the official White House statement of June 9 that the President did not realize his autograph was to be used for this purpose, but charged that Postmaster General Farley "has discovered several ingenious methods of raising campaign funds." He then quoted, tellingly, the President's words in his message on tax evasion, that some of "these methods "have the color of legality; others are on the borderline of legality; others are plainly contrary even to the letter of the law," and that "in this immediate problem the decency of American morals is involved."

The letter quoted by Snell in his resolution was addressed purportedly on Democratic National Committee stationery, with the name of Lawrence W. (Chip) Robert, secretary, on the letterhead, and was signed allegedly by M. H. Porter, of the committee.

Traffic Troubles

By Howard F. Wentworth.

At Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest there is a sign prohibiting left turns. It applies to all vehicles—except street cars. And as a consequence, much confusion results when a motorist—attempting to obey the law—comes face to face with a turning trolley.

We saw one woman driver literally "stand up" on her brakes to avoid a collision. And all the street-car motorman did was pound his bell.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzen says accidents have been reduced at this busy corner since the sign was erected—but it takes only one head-on crash with a trolley to ruin this record.

We are wondering (or are we?) who those members of Congress were in that big sedan which was stopped for 55-miles-an-hour on New York avenue the other day. They were apparently in a pretty big hurry to get somewhere. But their only answer to the policeman's questions was: "We are members of Congress on our way to the Capitol."

So they resumed their 55-mile-an-hour speed and left the officer scratching his head. This is called "Congressional immunity."

To whom it may concern: Why must traffic policemen stand right in the center of much-used lanes to direct slow-moving vehicles? The net result, it seems to us, is just more congestion as timid drivers swerve into another lane to avoid brushing the policemen's uniforms—or worse.

Much has been said anent overhanging tree limbs which obscure traffic signals. Would it be so much trouble to employ a few WPA workers to snip off a few inches of the offending obstructions?

A couple of dirty looks to that crossing policeman who yelled "Whereinhell do ya think yer goin'?" to an out-of-town driver the other night. Our visitors don't like that kind of language. Maybe it was the heat.

Many, many complaints have been received about bus drivers on Connecticut avenue who insist upon making sudden stops about five feet from the curb. It is very disconcerting—to say the least—to motorists directly behind the bus.

It is bad enough to inhale those gas fumes in moving traffic—but when you must stand still and take it—whew! Come on, busmen, pull close to the curb and let us pass—eh?

Incidentally, Mr. Van Duzer, how about consulting the Public Utilities Commission and have all bus stops moved to the far side of intersections? It's pretty tough to make right turns when buses are standing on the approach side of busy corners.

Congratulations to the Park Police for increasing the Rock Creek Parkway speed limit to 30 miles. It has helped no end. But watch those fast steppers who think 30 miles means 40!

Van Duzer warns that the accident "danger months" are still ahead. Perhaps a little co-operation and careful thinking will pull us through to a new safety record—we hope!

53, Including 1 Chinese, Prince Georges Officers to Take Course.

Thirty-two police rookies yesterday were sworn in as members of the Metropolitan force as the three-month police school was opened.

The rookies, the first of 53 who will comprise the school by Tuesday morning, took the oath from Howard E. Crawford in the morning, and heard Inspector L. I. H. Edwards on the morale and traditions of the police force.

Later night sticks, revolvers and badges were issued. Sergt. A. R. Lamb instructed them in the care of their revolvers, and Lieuts. Walter H. Thomas and Walter T. Storm supervised taking of fingerprints and issuance of equipment.

Tomorrow morning they will report to Lieut. Storm, who is in charge of the school. By then seven more will have joined the school—Jen Zien Huang, attached to the Chinese Embassy here, who is studying Washington police methods, and six members of the Prince Georges County police force, who also are studying police administration.

On Tuesday the school will be increased further by seven more recruits, members of the special squad under Lieut. Floyd Truscott who were largely responsible for the indictments recently returned in connection with gambling raids. On July 15, another seven members, recently certified by the Civil Service examiners, will join the school.

Lieut. Storm will begin instruction Tuesday in the police manual and other regulations.

Later a series of lectures on legal procedure, special investigation, fire prevention, ballistics and narcotic law enforcement will be given by members of the department. Other parts of the school's curriculum include mock trials, fingerprint demonstrations, first aid, pistol practice and athletic instruction.

Shooting of Youth Is Held Accidental

A certificate of accidental death was issued yesterday by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald in the fatal shooting of C. W. Caulderhead, 22, who died Friday night. Howard L. Melton, 21, a friend of Caulderhead's, who police said, held the gun, was exonerated.

According to police, Caulderhead and Melton, classmates at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, had been practicing the manual of arms with a .22 rifle, still sheathed in its cloth case. The accident happened in front of the Auto Supply and Service Station, Thirteenth and K streets northwest, where both were employed.

Dr. Kung, Gratified, Sailing for Europe

Dr. H. H. Kung, Chinese finance minister, who on Friday announced with the Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau an agreement by which this country will buy more Chinese silver and China will buy a portion of the United States gold supply, is leaving Washington today for Europe.

In a press statement yesterday the finance minister expressed gratification over the agreement with the Treasury. He said China appreciates the part Jesse Jones, RFC chairman, and Warren Lee Pierson, president of the Export-Import Bank, are playing "in furthering Sino-American trade relations."

Ship Launching Sponsors Named

Miss Margaret Ayers, daughter of Chairman W. A. Ayers, of the Federal Power Commission, will sponsor the heavy cruiser Wichita, under construction at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, Secretary Swanson announced yesterday. The Wichita will be christened about November 16.

The destroyer McCall, under construction at Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation's Union plant at San Francisco, Calif., will be sponsored by Miss Eleanor Kempff, daughter of Admiral Clarence C. Kempff, commandant of the Mare Island Navy Yard. To be named for the late Lieut. Edward Rutledge McCall, the new destroyer will be ready for launching August 27.

Speedy Equity Trials System In District Wins High Praise

Cleveland Method Cuts Time for Action on Suits From Three Years to One, Reduces Uncertainty and Expense.

After a five years' trial in District Court, the introduction here of the "Cleveland" system for expediting the trial of law and equity cases has been pronounced a success by trial attorneys and judges alike. It has cut the time for action on a suit from as long as three years to one year.

The Cleveland system, so-called because the system had its beginning in the Ohio metropolis, was brought here at the insistance of the nine justices of the District Court who saw in it a chance to do away with one of the most serious criticisms of the courts—the long delay between the filing of a suit and a final ruling.

They felt that litigants who were compelled to wait sometimes three years before having their day in court were entitled to more consideration, and a group was appointed to find a remedy.

On recommendation of the committee, the simplified system employed by Cleveland superior courts was ordered installed here.

The Cleveland system contemplated a motions court, to be presided over by a special justice, who was to consider only technical angles of the suit and the answer to it, and was in addition, to hear all preliminary matters.

Thus, one justice—last month it was Joseph W. Cox—was able to dispose of about a score of cases a day when well directed objections to suits, and husband-and-wife matters were brought before him. The time limit is 15 minutes a side.

Probably the most important step was the installation of an assignment commissioner, whose duty it is to keep track of "calendared" cases and have them ready for trial almost upon specified dates, thus doing away with the uncertainties arising from a lack of knowledge as to when the case would be tried.

Also, the assignment commissioner has been placed in charge of a "jury pool" which is a never ending source of jurors to all civil courts.

In addition, a close check is kept on the progress of each case and when it is apparent that one is nearing its close, another is prepared and is held in readiness to be sent in.

To the layman one of the most vital assets of the system is the fact that where it once took three years to get a trial in a damage suit, the time has been cut to a year, and is expected to go as low as six months. In equity matters, the plethora of "uncontested" divorce suits has somewhat tied up the equity docket, but the jurists, now on a three-months' vacation during which each one takes a two-weeks' whirl at the motions bench, have been making steady inroads on that situation and are confident they can soon bring it up to almost a monthly basis.

Perhaps one of the greatest advantages to the Government is the economy. Because of the pooling of all civil jurors, fewer are called, and those who are called can sit on more cases.

Alligator Seeking Warmer Weather Strolls From Home

Theres' an alligator on the loose in Takoma Park, but residents aren't barring doors and windows and locking babies in upstairs rooms. The 4-year-old wanderer is smaller than a 4-week-old child, just a foot long.

A pet of Mrs. Ruth J. Wynn, of 312 Carroll avenue, it strolled away from home yesterday, presumably in search of some real warm weather. Police were notified, and the 'gator hunt is on.

Oppose Segregation, Favor Housing, Wage-Hour, Education Bills.

Legislative, civic and economic questions affecting the Negro in America were considered yesterday at a regional conference of colored Elks in the auditorium of the Howard Theater, under direction of Judge William C. Hueston, commissioner of education, and Hobson Reynolds, of Philadelphia, commissioner of civil liberties. J. C. Bruce presided.

Judge Hueston said the purpose of the convention was to refute statements made in Congress to the effect the question of relationships between colored and white citizens in America long has been settled, and to set forth the dissatisfaction of the race concerning forthcoming legislation.

Charles S. Duke, Chicago architect, discussed the Wagner housing bill; the Black-Connery wage-hour bill was discussed by Leroy Jordan, of New Jersey; analysis of the Harrison Fletcher Black educational bill was made by D. A. Wilkerson, of Howard University; recommendations were made concerning unemployment by W. E. Lewin, of New York.

Oppose Segregation.

Findings of the conference, as drafted by Ellis Rivers, New York assemblyman, included the following statements:

"We opposed the Federal Government's taking advantage of the desperate needs of the colored citizen to segregate him out of America's economic life, or to create for him a black and inferior state, to discriminatee against him or deny him an equal opportunity in wages, education, farm benefits, public housing, or an honorable career in the Government service.

"We favor adoption of the Wagner Steagall bill. However, we state our firm belief that qualified colored citizens should be given full opportunity in the planning, erection and operation of Federal dwellings for low-income groups of colored citizens. We further advocate placement of a colored man on the Federal Housing Authority.

"We go along with the great labor organization advocating passage of the Black-Connery wage-hour bill. However, Americans are experienced with wage and hour differentials fixed from Washington and know they have been highly discriminating and unfair to the Negro. This we protest, and to insure against its repetition, urge that the bill be amended to prohibit the fixing of wages or hours so that the Negro must work for less wages or for longer hours than any other race in the same occupation."

Favor Education Bill.

"We favor the Harrison-Fletcher-Black education bill as amended so that a just and equitable distribution of Federal aid between white and colored schools, in States where separate schools obtain, must be achieved as a condition to their continuing to receive Federal grants. We further urge this conference to petition the President to appoint a colored representative on the advisory committee on education, under this bill.

"We favor legislative aid to farmers, and request Secretary Wallace to appoint a colored representative on the board of directors of any Farmers' Home Loan Corporation created by Federal legislation, and that steps be taken to insure allocation of money to Negro farmers in proportion to their population ratio in a given county, whether the fund is administered by a county committee or otherwise."

The Gavagan anti-lynching bill was indorsed and its passage by Congress urged.

The first district regional oratorical contest will be held at the theater today at 3 o'clock, with Dr. Hudson Oliver, of New York, presiding. Orators from New England, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania and the District will compete. The winner will be sent to the national oratorical contest in Cleveland next month incident to the Elk convention.

FHLB Offices Are Centralized In New Building

Four Subsidiary Agencies Now Housed at First and Indiana Ave.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board solved its own housing problem yesterday when it brought itself and four subsidiary agencies under one roof in its new ten-story building at First street and Indiana avenue northwest.

Offices at four different locations previously had served the board and its agencies.

Officials believe centralization will increase efficiency and permit economy.

The Acacia Building was purchased some time ago for use of the Home Owners Loan Corporation. Remodeling of the building and construction of the ten-story addition have provided 309 offices and several large working areas.

The agencies centralized are the Federal Home Loan Bank system, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, the Federal Savings and Loan Division and the Home Owners Loan Corporation.

Cafeteria service is to be provided on the tenth floor, while two small dining rooms will serve officials and board members.

Six More Seized In Gaming Drive

Five more persons were arrested yesterday in two gaming raids and a sixth "street operator" was charged, in a continuance of the antigambling drive led by Lieut. Floyd Truscott.

Three men were arrested in a raid on a barber shop in the 1200 block New York avenue northwest. They gave their names as Edward T. Parsons, 37, of the 3600 block New Hampshire avenue northwest; Harry Schecter, 43, of the 500 block Lamont street northwest, and Heywood Pope, 23, colored, of the 1500 block Swann street northwest. They were charged with setting up a gaming table.

Scout Site Is Deserted Village; Equipment Put on Sale Cheap

Jamboree Grounds to Be Reconditioned When Tents Have Vanished; Home Supplies Available at 15 Per Cent of Cost.

A deserted village, that was inhabited by 27,000 Jamboree Boy Scouts, awaited the wrecking crew yesterday.

Empty tents stretching in long rows all the way from the Washington Monument to the airport were ready to be folded up and given back to the Government which loaned them.

Scouts on special duty were gathering up pots and pans, and other leftovers, which will go on sale Monday. Scout officials announced yesterday that thousands of dollars worth of equipment will be offered the public at about 15 per cent of its original cost.

It will take until the middle of September to "rehabilitate" the grounds used by the Scouts. When the tents and other buildings are down, the 350-acre area will have to be completely reconditioned, and all grass plots reseeded. The Boy Scout organization will do that in carrying out the agreement by which it was granted use of the National Capital Parks site.

There were several hundred boys still around yesterday. Between 20,000 and 25,000 had been routed out of the city since Friday night. The last are to go Monday. Railroad officials explained that even if there were trains leaving every few minutes, it would have taken them a day to clear all the Scouts out of local depots.

The Scouts had hardly evacuated before prospective customers for discarded camp materials began to appear on the camping grounds, officials said. Interested persons were directed, as they will be all next week, to the quartermaster tents.

There, housewives and campers can pick out such utensils as brooms for 10 cents apiece, 10-gallon garbage cans for a quarter, 12-quart water buckets for a dime, wash basins and pudding pans at the rate of two for a nickel. Other kitchen items for sale include drip pans, salt and pepper shakers, dish pans, grease traps, pot hooks, 4-quart aluminum pitchers, can openers.

Campers, it was reported, had already shown an interest in showers, tables, stoves, oil cans and dry-ice boxes.

Shower buildings, complete without fittings are being offered for $20.

Proceeds from the sale of equipment will be used to help defray cost of the Jamboree, which, officials said yesterday, will pay for itself.

Employe Accused Of Lumber Raids To Build House

The fabled house that Jack built has a factual descendant in the house Frank Hailey built, police said last night, as they locked him up for investigation.

Hailey is colored, 32, and lives in the 800 block of Thirteenth street northeast.

Police arrested Hailey, a laborer on the Government Printing Office annex, on complaint that he stole enough lumber as an employe to erect a house of his own near Third and C streets northeast.

Material Hailey is said to have used was submitted to Government contractors, who identified it, police said.

Officials last night knitted their brows. They do not know what to do with the house that Hailey built.

'Harrison' Is Held As 'E. La Rogue' Over Hotel Bill

First, police said, he used the name of E. La Rogue, without even smiling, when he registered at a downtown hotel. Later, they charged he registered elsewhere as Robert Harrison.

The gentleman in question said he was from New York, and at the first hotel ran up a $76 bill and $129 sightseeing expenses.

"Okay, boys," he said to the clerk, "my mother'll be in tomorrow and take care of everything."

Next morning his hosts found he had escaped by lowering himself, his baggage and a hotel radio to a nearby roof.

Held on an open charge, he said his real name is Edgar Garret Le Rouge.

Potatoes, Not Politics, Interest Van Devanter As Retired Justice Tills Soil on Md. Farm

Pays Little Heed to Senatorial Debate on Court Bill; Would Rather Talk of Wheat Fields.

By the Associated Press.

Ellicott City, Md., July 10.—Willis Van Devanter, retired Supreme Court justice, looked out over his wheat fields today and said he is paying little attention to Senatorial debate over the court reorganization bill.

"All this," he said slowly, his dark eyes gazing across the mellow acres, "should add 10 years to my life."

The justice stepped down from the high tribunal last month after 26 years' service to live on his farm, an hour's drive from Washington.

Away from the crowded life of the Capital, he would rather talk about potatoes than politics and corn than constitutionality.

Down on his pleasant 788-acre farm, he is taking it easy—but not too easy, for this is real dirt acreage, not a hobby. Roads trail through deep green woods to orderly fields of wheat, rye, barley, corn and soy beans.

Tired of being driven about the place, the justice at 78 has reached another big decision.

"I am looking for a good saddle horse," he said.

Every acre is under his personal supervision. He drives across them like a kindly baronial landowner, nodding and smiling to his workers.

Last fall he ran afoul of a game warden who found him hunting ducks with a license, but minus a special duck stamp.

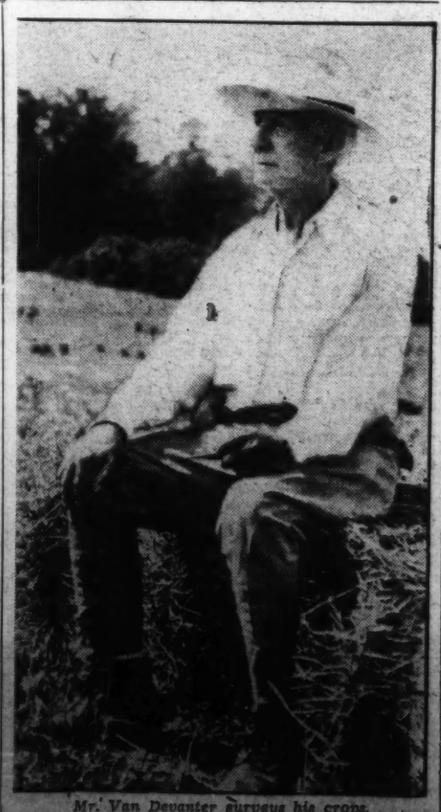
He says the incident had nothing to do with it, but his 780 acres are now, of all things, a game refuge. Quail and pheasant find immunity here, and nobody can shoot them, not even Mr. Justice Van Devanter.

He hasn't found it hard to change from the routine of court life to that of the country. He misses his judicial associates, but three of them—Justices Roberts (another farmer), Butler and McReynolds—already have visited him.

Mr. Van Devanter goes about his farm in an open-neck Army shirt and trousers, a floppy straw hat and boots or ankle-high shoes.

He refuses, however, to observe rural life to the extent of getting up and going to bed with the chickens.

"I get up," he said, "when I get ready, and go to bed at the same hour."



Mr. Van Devanter surveys his crops.

Tax Committee Swings Inquiry To Legal Aides

Doughton Seeking Curb Against Ex-Bureau Attorneys.

By the Associated Press.

Legislation to blunt the effectiveness of Internal Revenue Bureau lawyers who return to private practice gained the support yesterday of Chairman Doughton of the tax evasion investigating committee.

The chairman said such lawyers should not be allowed to use their departmental friends to pursue tax cases for their private clients. He added that if suitable prohibitory provisions could be worked out, he thought they should be included in legislation to plug "loopholes" in the tax laws.

At the request of Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, a member of the committee, a list of internal revenue lawyers who have left the service for private practice is to be presented by the Treasury when the committee resumes public hearings on Tuesday.

The committee also will receive details of other tax cases which La Follette said were "more startling" than any of the tax avoiding evidence presented thus far.

Doughton said the committee would complete its public hearings Tuesday or Wednesday.

Then the group will begin consultations over what legislation may be proposed at this session.

Doughton said quite a few Internal Revenue Bureau attorneys returned to private practice and many complaints had been made that these lawyers used the information they gained in the Government service to help clients reduce or avoid taxation.

"Some of them advertise they have been in the bureau," he said. "What worries me most, however, is the possibility of them using their friends in the bureau. Sometimes these things go farther than people intend them to go."

Venezuela Scouts Return in 2½ Days After 2½-Yr. Hike

Two and a half years coming and two and a half days going back—that will be the record of Rafael Angel Betit and Juan Carmona, who leave for New York by plane tomorrow for a short visit before their return to Caracas, Venezuela, from Washington Saturday. They came on foot through jungles, deserts and cities, and will fly home.

They left Caracas January 11, 1935, and arrived here June 16, 1937, in time to attend the Boy Scout Jamboree, although that was not their original objective. They like Washington, which they say is like a garden, compared to other cities they passed through. What impressed them most in the Capital? "Las muchachas" (the girls).

A book describing their experiences will be published in Spanish when they return to Venezuela and, on their trip to New York, they expect to complete arrangements for the publication of an English translation in this country.

Carmona will settle down to the quiet life of a businessman in his father's firm in Caracas when he arrives home. Betit still feels the urge for adventure and expects to go into aviation.

U.F.W. Recognizes Unorganized Units

Responding to the President's statement defining the limits for collective bargaining by Federal employes, Jacob Baker, provisional president of the United Federal Workers of America, yesterday said the U. F. W. A. aims to give the unorganized employes a voice in the adjustment of working conditions.

He added that the national officers and organizers of the C. I. O. unit, which he heads, "share the President's view that a system of adjustment of wage and working conditions is as necessary now as it was in 1913 when the President, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, first established it there."

Japanese Army Of Manchuria Enters China

Units of 100,000-Man Force Moved; More Fighting Expected Today.

By the Associated Press.

Peiping (Sunday), July 11.—Troop trains carrying units of Japan's powerful Manchurian army were reported rolling toward the North China trouble zone today as Chinese and Japanese forces resumed their bitter, intermittent warfare.

They clashed again yesterday and last night along the Yungting River, about 10 miles west of Peiping, ending a precarious 36-hour truce. Although fighting ceased shortly before midnight, it was expected to be resumed at daybreak.

The Japanes asserted they were the opening combat of the renewed conflict, capturing Lungwangmiao (temple of the dragon king) on the east side of the Yungting River, about half a mile north of Marco Polo Bridge.

It was near this beautiful 900-foot marble span that the original conflict began Wednesday night, when units of Japan's North China garrison on night maneuvers clashed with soldiers of the Chinese Twenty-ninth Army.

The first phase was ended by an armistice Friday. Japanese declared the Chinese along the Yungting opened fire on them at 7:20 p. m. Saturday. The Japanese took up the challenge and seized Lungwangmiao after two hours' brisk fighting. They said their casualties were heavier than in the earlier phase of the conflict, in which they lost 10 killed and 22 wounded.

Chinese charged the Japanese had broken the truce several hours previously, when they sent 600 soldiers with tanks, machine guns and field pieces from Fengtai to the Yungting area, where they attacked the walled village of Wanpinghsien.

Fengtai is an important railway junction about halfway between Peiping and the Yungting. The Japanese had withdrawn most of their men there after the Friday truce.

Reports indicated several local clashes followed the return of the Japanese from Fengtain to the river, shortly after noon Saturday.

Dispatches telling of Japanese reinforcements some from as far away as Mukden, made the outlook ominous. Hitherto only units of Japan's relatively small North China garrison have been engaged. The dispatches indicated the army in Manchuria—which totals over 100,000—might become involved.

The Hopei-Chahar council, highest Chinese authority in the north, made public reports that ten trains carrying units of the Kwantung army—Japan's Manchurian force of occupation—had rolled out toward Peiping and two already had passed Shanhaikwan, at the Manchukuo-China frontier.

Chinese railway officials said two Japanese troop trains which passed through Tientsin reached Fengtai, where troops detrained and moved off in different directions, as if to encircle Peiping.

The trains were said to carry tanks, armored cars, field guns and machine guns.

"We are preparing for war," said one high Chinese official, charging Japan alone was responsible for breaking the truce.

(Japanese reports in Shanghai said Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek had ordered four of his finest divisions to move toward the Peiping area and had issued mobilization orders for his air force.)

Peiping was again under rigid martial law.

Huge Southern Cotton Concern Reveals Income

Defends $350,000 Benefit Payment, Says $500,000 Earnings Possible.

By the Associated Press.

Cotton farmers learned yesterday the acreage income of one of the largest farm corporations in the South as the result of publicity over large farm benefit payments.

Oscar Johnston, former Assistant AAA administrator and now manager of the Delta Pine & Land Co. of Mississippi, disclosed the thousands of acres operated by the corporation averaged from a low of $68.63 to a high of almost $120 an acre in the last four years.

In a letter defending the payment of a $350,000 farm benefit check to the corporation, Johnston said the firm might have made $500,000 more if it had not cut acreage in the crop reduction program.

The letter was made public by Farm Administration officials. Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, a critic of AAA payments, had asked for details of these payments. The letter was forwarded to Vandenberg.

Received $363,000.

Johnston said his corporation received $363,002.57 in farm benefit payments during the last four years.

"We are willing," Johnston said, "to be excused from further participation therein (in farm reduction programs), and to leave the burden incident to reduction of the existing surplus of cotton upon the shoulders of small producers, but in so doing we point out that in our judgment such a course would be grossly unfair to the small producers."

In 1933, Johnston said, the company realized an average income of $68.63 an acre through sale of cotton at 10.9 cents a pound and cottonseed at $22.50 a ton. Half of this went to tenants, he said, so the company received $34.77 an acre in contrast with $8.64 an acre in Government benefit payments.

Johnston said the company realized $82.34 an acre in 1934 through sale of cotton at 13.05 cents a pound and $49.63 a ton for cottonseed. He said the Government average, $14.55 an acre, compared with $41.17 the company might have earned.

In 1935, he said, the company received $87.52 an acre from sale of cotton at 12.82 and cottonseed at $56. The company's share of $43.76 an acre compared with $11.99 in benefit payments.

Last year acreage income was $119.91 an acre from cotton sold at $13.44 cents and cottonseed at $63.46, Johnston said. The company's share of $59.95 compared with Government payments of $13.95.

Johnston said the company plowed under 25 per cent of its total acreage in 1933, or 4,050 acres; diverted 38 per cent, or 6,232 acres, in 1934; 35 per cent, or 5,674 acres, in 1935, and 30.63 per cent, or 5,175 acres, last year.

Navy to Switch Earhart Hunt To Open Water

and west of Howland, but switched to the Phoenix area on the belief of naval authorities wind conditions and unidentified radio signals pointed to the south and east of Howland.

With the Colorado's planes detailed to survey Enderbury, Phoenix, Birnie and Sydney Islands of the Phoenix group, shore patrols of the minesweeper Swan headed for Canton Island, largest of the archipelago.

Backing up these combined efforts, the powerful Lexington moved swiftly southward for the last and most dramatic phase of unprecedented search.

Naval authorities said they had reached no conclusions as to how long the Lexington would stay, although Rear Admiral O. G. Murfin, directing the hunt from here, blocked out a 265,000-square-mile area to be covered. Theoretically the Lexington's planes could scan such an area in about four and a half days.

Colorado Leaves Tuesday.

Search officials said the Colorado would have to start back to Hawaii Tuesday for fuel. She was ordered to contact and refuel the Swan during the day and also to supply the three destroyers accompanying the Lexington.

The fuel supply of the Coast Guard cutter Itasca, obtained earlier in the week from the Colorado, was deemed sufficient to last until July 18. The Itasca has been in the search from the start.

With a refueling today, the Swan was considered able to keep going without further supply contacts until July 20.

Broadway Plans Variety Revival

New York, July 10 (AP).—Broadway turned thumbs down on burlesque and its strip-tease accompaniment today and prepared for a revival of vaudeville with production of "variety revues." Seven of 14 burlesque houses closed in the past ten weeks are expected to reopen Monday under the new policy.

Operators of the former burlesque theaters brought it all about with formation of the Variety Revue Theater Association of New York. They agreed the word "burlesque" must go with the "strip tease," and imposed a code of conduct upon themselves, to be administered by a board of six, none connected with the new industry.

Loyalist Drive Before Madrid Crushed, Claim

Insurgents Report 3,000 Slain, 6,000 Wounded in Miaja Army.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, July 10.—Insurgent field commanders reported tonight the government offensive against the Madrid siege was smashed.

The republic's army, they said, "suffered a great disaster."

Official communiques asserted that 3,000 of Gen. Jose Miaja's Central Front government troops were killed and 6,000 wounded when insurgents counter-attacked near Brunete, about 15 miles west of Madrid.

The government army was reported in flight from Brunete and in a desperate plight on the Usera front, on Madrid's southwestern edge, after an attack by 20,000 troops collapsed.

Insurgent Generalissimo Francisco Franco hurled the whole weight of his aerial forces in the drive to smash the five-day-old offensive. He sent 150 tri-motored bombing planes and 150 machine-gunning pursuit ships into the air in the greatest display of aerial strength yet seen in the civil war.

His lieutenants said a tank-protected army of 30,000 government soldiers was suffering "astronomical" losses under a terrific bombardment from the sky.

(The government defense ministry, however, reported insurgent counter-attacks were repulsed on the Brunete front and its forces had penetrated deeper to the rear of the siege lines.

(Official communiques reported capture of large stores of war materials and heavy insurgent casualties against few government losses. One company of "Fascist infantry," it was said, surrendered in a body and there were numerous other desertions.)

Insurgent planes "bombarded" Santander, objective of Gen. Franco's Basque campaign in northwestern Spain, with pamphlets demanding that the city "surrender or take the consequences."

New Deal Test Likely in N. Y. Mayoralty Vote

Tammany May Pit Former Justice Mahoney Against G. O. P. LaGuardia.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 10.—The city's mayoralty election is four months off but the campaign already is taking on the appearance of a major political battlefield.

Both as a popular reaction test to national issues, including relief, and as a strategic lever in the 1938 Congressional and 1940 Presidential elections, the New York campaign is considered extremely important in political circles.

Fiorello H. LaGuardia, Fusion incumbent, started things off this week by saying he would seek the Republican nomination. He hopes to be the first anti-Tammany "reform" leader in the city's history to succeed himself.

LaGuardia was swept into office wearing the Republican label, but backed by a complex anti-Tammany coalition, just after the disclosures of the Seabury investigation.

This week he was asked by a number of prominent Republicans to seek the Republican nomination again. After he said he would, another Republican group got ready, behind the scenes, to come out in open opposition to him on the ground his public policies have not been Republican as party leaders understand the label.

LaGuardia has been a vocal supporter of President Roosevelt and the New Deal, but he is anathema to local Democratic organizations.

The five county Democratic leaders of the city several weeks ago selected United States Senator Robert F. Wagner, New Deal supporter, as the candidate who would have the best chance to beat LaGuardia. But Senator Wagner declined.

In the midst of local Democratic uncertainty, Manhattan's borough president, Samuel Levy, announced he would seek the nomination. Then the storm broke and some 30 other candidates were boosted. But the field is narrowing as bitterness increases.

Tammany leaders have a candidate in mind.

He is former Supreme Court Justice Jeremiah T. Mahoney. While there are a number of dark horses who might be brought forth, Mahoney is the only remaining one whose candidacy has thus far been seriously considered by all the county leaders.

Mahoney was the original sponsor of Senator Wagner. He is an ardent New Dealer, and, moreover, an admirer of LaGuardia, with whom he agrees in policies and in the goal of efficient municipal administration. Mahoney's platform would differ from LaGuardia's in one respect. He believes an efficient local Democratic organization would greatly benefit the city.

U. Va. Speaker Urges 5-Power Pact for Peace

Italian Castigates League as 'Danger;' G. W. Official Talks on Trade.

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, Va., July 10.—Luigi Villari, Italian diplomat, soldier and journalist, said tonight a five-power pact by which Italy, England, France, Germany and Poland would suspend the race in armaments would be the soundest effort yet attempted for peace in Europe and throughout the world.

Dr. Villari, addressing the University of Virginia Institute of Public Affairs, condemned the Franco-Soviet pact as "the chief cause of European anxiety and the chief danger to world peace."

He described Russia's membership in the League of Nations as having "further contributed to make of that institution a source of evil and mischief and should dissuade all really peace-loving nations from putting their trust in it."

The League, he asserted, has been wrecked as an institution and discredited even as an ideal.

Good For "Minor Points."

"The League of Nations may still survive and serve to settle minor problems," Dr. Villari said, "but it would be worse than dangerous to put one's trust in it to solve the major disputes."

Tonight's program closed the first of the two-week session in which the institute will consider the problem of internationl co-operation for world peace and collective security.

Organizations for collective security and storm centers of the Far East will be subjects for special discussion during the second week. Collective security as a domestic problem also will be studied, and attention is to be given to social security legislation within the United States.

Inter-American relations have received particular consideration during the week just ending, and tonight Dr. George Howland Cox, director of the Inter-American Center of George Washington University, who had been conducting a discussion group here, outlined suggestions for educational co-operation looking toward improved inter-American business and commercial relations.

Not Total Failure.

Dr. Villari, a former representative of Italy on the secretariat of the League, began a discussion on the maintenance of peace otherwise than through the League of Nations by denying the League had been an absolute failure.

"The League has proved able to fulfill many useful functions," he asserted, "in the economic field, in social and health matters, in various technical questions. It has also succeeded in settling certain minor political questions, but even there it succeeded only because the great powers were in agreement."

Frank Wickhem, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., president of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, told the institute the fact nations refuse to disarm completely proves they contemplate wars in the future.

Urges Peace Education.

J. Kenneth Bradley, of Connecticut, chairman of the Young Republican division of the Republican National Committee, asserted the final achievement of peace will be the result of years of education.

He added that "if we are really sincere in our opposition to war, we should be willing to commit ourselves in advance to a like set of rules to govern the conduct of our foreign affairs in the event of an international crisis."

Miss Doris Stevens, chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women, told the institute there is reason to rejoice in the pledges by the American States toward equality of treatment for women and in the steps they have taken to translate this principle into practice.

She reminded the audience her organization is an advisory body of the Pan-American Commission and asserted discriminatory treatment based on sex in nationality rights is on the way to being outlawed.

Guatemala Industrial Utopia, Says Missionary Here on Visit

President Ubico in Six Years Has Eliminated Graft, Established Security for Workers, Declares Cleric.

Life and the pursuit of happiness in some degree of comfort is not confined to the United States, according to the Rev. Orley Ford, Seventh Day Adventist missionary, who has returned here after several years in Guatemala.

Mr. Ford with his wife and three children is visiting his brother, the Rev. John E. Ford, 604 Erie avenue, Takoma Park, Md., for a few days before going to Kansas.

He told of the reforms that have been carried out in Guatemala during the past six years under leadership of President Jorge Ubico, contrasting government economy there with reports of American extravagance.

"The people of this land, great as it is in financial strength, could take a profitable lesson from Guatemala.

$43 in Treasury.

"Before Ubico came to office, Guatemala was honeycombed with political crookedness in national, state and municipal governments. There was exactly $43 in the national treasury, and government officials had not been paid their salaries in many months. Bribery in all departments was rampant.

"Now not even petty thievery exists in any kind of governmental work, there have been no strikes in industry, and great improvements have been made in the number and quality of public works. Not only are all government employes, from the highest official down to the lowest grades of workers receiving their pay at regular intervals, but there is even a surplus in the treasury. Not a bribe taker can be found anywhere in the government."

Mr. Ford said that industry, too, had been put on a stronger basis than ever before and labor troubles had been ended.

Era of Peace.

"President Ubico came to office at the end of many years of revolution and counter-revolution. Today the country is at rest, and the people go about their daily work conscious that the government is protecting them and their rights. The different religious denominations have liberty to preach the gospel, but they are prohibited from advocating any doctrine that has the slightest touch of politics in it.

"All preachers must get permits from the government and must submit for approval the list of subjects they expect to discuss in their services. This is done as a precautionary measure since the government guarantees freedom of conscience, with every missionary free to proclaim what is taught in the Bible, and he is assured by the government that it is perfectly capable of operating governmental affairs without help from preachers."

Dr. Ford expects to return to Guatemala and resume missionary activities at the end of six-months furlough.

Milk Sales Jump 50% in Campaign

"Drink More Milk" Week, ending yesterday, boosted local milk sales at least 50 per cent over a similar period last year, according to the National Association of Chain Drug Stores.

"Reports received to date from such key cities as New York, Washington, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Detroit, San Francisco and Los Angeles," said Fred J. Griffiths, association spokesman, "indicate that our goal of a 50 per cent increase in the sale of milk will be far exceeded when final reports are in.

"This special milk drive," he added, "was inaugurated to assist the farmer in keeping milk in the most profitable price bracket during the peak production period."

4-Year-Old Star Leader Throughout

Staves Off Challenges to Boost '37 Earnings to $82,025.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 10.—Strengthening his position as leader of the handicap division, Mrs. C. S. Howard's Seabiscuit today easily won the $20,000 Butler Handicap at Empire City for his fifth successive triumph in eight starts this year.

Having administered defeat to the East's best in the Brooklyn Handicap two weeks ago, the 4-year-old son of Hard Tack, a Wheatley Stable castoff, today included two Midwestern campaigners, Mrs. Emil Denemark's Corinto and Finance, in his list of victims.

Carrying scale weight of 126 pounds and conceding plenty of poundage to his five rivals, the California star finished the mile and three-sixteenths with a length and a half to spare over B. M. Byers' Thorson after being bothered by James Butler's Caught soon after the start. Thorson, forced to go wide because of the crowding, closed fast to take runner-up honors three lengths in front of Corinto, winner of the Stars and Stripes Handicap at Arlington Park last Monday. Then came William Zeigler's Esposa, second last year, Caught and Finance.

Guided by John (Red) Pollard, Butte, Mont., veteran, Seabiscuit led almost from the first jump, stood off repeated challenges and then drew out in the last furlong to finish the long journey in 1:58 3-5. The time was only two-fifths of a second slower than the track record set by Good Gamble in winning the event last year.

The crowd of about 12,000 sweltering fans made Seabiscuit the 9-to-10 choice to win the purse of $18,025. The triumph boosted his earnings for the year to $82,025, a tidy sum for a horse that such a shrewd trainer as James Fitzsimmons let go for a reported price of $8,000. His record for the year includes six victories, and a second behind Rosemont in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap last February.

Ranger Is Victor Over Rival Yachts

Aboard Coast Guard Cutter Faunce, off Newport, R. I., July 10 (AP).—Fleetly outdistancing her two rivals, the racing sloop Ranger won her twelfth straight victory today, defeating Rainbow by nearly four minutes. Yankee, Far Eastern, dropped out of the race at the three-quarter mark.

The victory gave Harold S. Vanderbilt's yacht for the defense of the America's Cup a clean sweep of the series with Yankee and Rainbow for the Nichols Cup.

Dave Whiteside Wins Mass. Golf Tourney

Winchester, Mass., July 10 (U.P.).—Dave Whiteside, of New Bedford, veteran campaigner and ruled the favorite, today won the Massachusetts amateur golf championship by defeating Art Petterson, of Oak Hill, 6 and 5.

Both were off their games at start of the 36-hole battle. Whiteside had defeated Fred Wright, six times champion, one up, in semifinals yesterday. The 29-year-old Peterson, one of the field's longest hitters, had defeated Arthur Billingham in a closing rush.

Nazis Defeat Czechs; Meet U. S. in Net Play

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, July 10.—For the second time in three years Germany earned the right to meet the United States in the inter-zone final of the Davis Cup competition today when the combination of Baron Gottfried von Cramm and Heinrich Henkel scored in the doubles for the third straight victory over Czechoslovakia in the final round of the European competition.

Following up their singles triumphs of yesterday, Von Cramm and Henkel whipped Ladislaus Hecht and Josef Caska, 6—1, 6—2, 10—12, 6—0. Two singles matches remained to be played, but have no effect on the outcome other than the final score.

The Americans, paced by red-headed Don Budge, will clash with Germany's two-man team at Wimbledon July 17, 19 and 20. The survivor of that series will go into the challenge round against England at Wimbledon, July 24, 26 and 27.

Budge is the only member of the American team that defeated the Germans four matches to one in 1925. He beat both Henkel and Von Cramm in the singles, conquering the latter after the series had been decided. Wilmer Allison, playing No. 1 on the United States team, split even in his two singles matches and paired with Johnny Van Ryn to whip Cramm and K. Lund in the doubles.

Red Sox Score Three Runs in Eleventh to Win Gruelling Finale.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, July 10.—The Athletics lost both ends of a doubleheader with the Boston Red Sox this afternoon, running their losing streak to 12 in a row. The scores were 9-2 and 5-2, the second game going 11 innings.

Boston pounded out four homers in returning Lefty Grove, who quit after five innings because of the heat. He was the winner in the opening clash. Joe Cronin, who hit two, sewed the game up with his first one hit in the fifth inning with Chapman on base. Jimmy Foxx and Buster Mills hit the other circuit drives.

Clint Brown's Single and Relief Pitching Win for Chicagoans.

Chicago, July 10 (AP).—Pitcher Clint Brown not ony played the part of rescuer for the White Sox today but also drove in the run which gave the Chicago Club a 5 to 4 victory over the St. Louis Browns in 11 innings.

The Sox win was the second of the current series from the Browns and kept the Chicagoans within five and one-half games of the league leading New York Yankees.

In the decisive eleventh, Jackie Hayes opened with a walk, Berger sacrificed and Sewell was intentionally passed. In this setting, Brown, who had entered the game to relieve Merritt (Sugar) Cain in the eighth, banged a single to center to score Hayes with the winning marker.

Hubbell Halts Dodgers, 4-0; Allows 3 Hits

Giants' Star Wins Fourth Straight; Pitches Six Hitless Innings.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, July 10.—King Carl Hubbell took sweet revenge on the Dodgers today, blanking them with three hits as he pitched the New York Giants to a 4-to-0 victory to even the current series.

Facing the Brooklyns for the first time since they broke his all-time high winning streak of 24 straight on May 31, "Old Squarepants" fanned only one, but did not walk a batter. He pitched six innings of hitless ball, allowing only a single by Johnny Cooney in the first, a double by Cookie Lavagetto with two away in the second, and a single by Tony Malinosky in the eighth.

It was Hubbell's fourth straight victory in his comeback campaign, and his twelfth victory of the year.

The Giants staked him to a two run lead up to the sixth inning, and then Wally Berger made it certain with a homer with a mate aboard in the eighth.

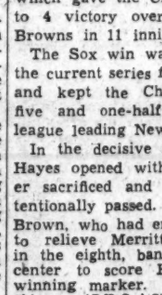
Charlie Chaplin and Groucho And 2 Guys Clash at Tennis

By the Associated Press.

Beverly Hills, Calif., July 10.—Big-shoed Charlie Chaplin and Fred Perry are scheduled to play Ellsworth Vines and Groucho Marx—minus his cigar—in a tennis match here tomorrow.



CHAPLIN.

That, baldly stated, is the line-up of the formal opening of the new Beverly Hills Tennis Club.

It sounds like a lie, but it isn't. It sounds like a mad dream, teaming the world's leading professional net stars with two of the screen's greatest comedians. But it isn't.

Ardent tennis fans may shudder at the thought of America's Vines and England's very proper Perry clowning with a couple of professional clowns, but they needn't. There won't be any clowning.

It's serious business, this match. And what's more, the Messrs. Marx and Chaplin are fair to middlin' good tennis players.

It was Harpo Marx who told that Groucho once played his 12-year-old son and was beaten, 6—0, 6—0.

Groucho, determined to do better, sought out an instructor. He practiced religiously and again challenged his son. Son won. The score was 6—0, 6—0.

But that was long ago. Groucho, now one of the owners of the elegant new club, has really improved his game. Chaplin has long been recognized as a good player.

British Track Stars Defeat Harvard-Yale

By the Associated Press.

Cambridge, Mass., July 10.—After five previous failures on American soil, the combined Oxford-Cambridge track team defeated the Harvard-Yale forces, seven first places to five, today. Three meet records fell. The British collegians' success was due to the "doubles" registered by Cambridge's Godfrey Brown, England's current super-runner, in the quarter and half-mile races and the Oxonian Alan Pennington in the sprints.

Brown, who was expected to threaten Ben Eastman's world mark of 46.4 for the 440, was timed in 47.7 seconds when he broke the tape six yards ahead of James D. Lightbody, jr., Harvard freshman son of the American Olympic hero of 30-odd years ago.

With the 12-event meet standing six first places to five in favor of the British, Brown, who was runner-up to the U. S. A.'s Archie Williams in the last Olympic 400-meter run, raced out of the ruck at the three-quarters mark and put on such a blistering finish that he led Alex Northrop, of Harvard, by 8 yards in the 880, turned in 1:54.3, to clinch the Britishers' first victory on this side of the Atlantic.

Brown's 47.7 was a new meet record. Others were supplied by Alfred Mills, of Yale, when he won the 220-yard low hurdles in 23.6 seconds, and Pennington, when he broke the tape in the 220 sprint in 21.3 seconds. The latter's first triumph was a slow 10.1 seconds performance in the 100.

The unexpected was provided by C. A. John Emery, of Cambridge, when he won the mile by 25 yards from Alex Northrop, of Harvard, in 4:13.8.

The other two British winners were Ali Irfan, of Cambridge, with a 46-foot-¾-inch throw in the shot-put, and Charles E. A. Towne, of Cambridge, in the 2-mile, which he ran in 9:40 while beating Capt. Wilbur Woodland, of Yale, by 50 yards.

The American colleges swept both hurdles, the broad and high jumps and the pole vault.

Weaver, DeShong Face Yanks Today

By a Staff Correspondent.

New York, July 10.—Manager Bucky Harris, in a desperate effort to gain an even break with the Yankees for the four-game series here, will start his two right-handers, Monte Weaver and Jimmy DeShong, against the New Yorkers in a double-header tomorrow.

DeShong and Weaver are the two Washington pitchers who in recent years have operated with greatest success against the Yankees. Originally, Harris planned to pitch the rookie, Ken Chase, in one game of the twin bill, but altered his plans when Chase was sent into a relief role today.

Lefty Gomez, who shut out the Nats last week, and Spud Chandler, rookie right-hander, will take the mound for the Yankees.

Wednesday Deadline.

New York, July 10 (U.P.).—Deadline for all entries for the national amateur golf championship to be played at Portland, Oreg., August 23-28 will be Wednesday, July 14, at 5 p. m., at the U. S. A. G. offices, 73 East Fifty-seventh street, New York City, Joseph Dey, executive secretary, announced today.

Reds Win, 11-3, Over St. Louis; 4 Homers Help

Warneke Is Driven From Mound in the Fifth by Opposition.

St. Louis, July 10 (AP).—Lon Warneke of the Cardinals went after his eleventh season victory today but instead was charged with his fourth defeat as Cincinnati's Reds pummeled St. Louis for an 11-to-3 victory.

From the time the Veteran Chick Hafey, a former Card, doubled, to drive in Les Scarsella with the Reds' initial run in the first inning, Cincinnati held the upper hand.

Warneke was jerked after Ival Goodman hit the Reds' fourth home run and thirteenth hit off the Arkansas humming bird in the fifth.

Kuhel and Powell Fined $25 Each

By a Staff Correspondent.

New York, July 10.—First Baseman Joe Kuhel, of the Nats, and Outfielder Jake Powell, of the Yankees, took the field at the start of today's game $25 poorer.

That was the extent of the fines levied against them by League President Will Harridge this morning, following their fistic battle on the field at Yankee Stadium yesterday. Apparently the umpires dealt leniently with Kuhel and Powell in their reports to the league head, for no suspension of the players was forthcoming.

Washington Is Held Runless for 8 Innings by Red Ruffing.

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Yankee Stadium, New York, July 10.—An improved Washington ball team, smarting under a 16-2 defeat of the day before, today held the Yankees to a 12-2 victory, depriving the New Yorkers of a shutout triumph by a stirring ninth inning rally that fell only 10 runs short of tying the score.

The Washington pitchers encountered only three bad innings against the New Yorks—in the second when the Yanks scored three runs, in the fourth when the Yanks scored eight runs, and in the sixth when the Yanks were held to one run.

The weather was hot, but not as hot as Red Ruffing or the region bounded by the collar around Wes Ferrell's neck. Ruffing held the Nats to nine hits and was in possession of a shutout until the Nats banged him around for those two runs in the ninth. Wes Ferrell held the Yankees to nine hits in the three and a third innings Manager Bucky Harris suffered him to remain on the mound.

The Nats heaped all kinds of ignominy on the Yankees. They got 'em out in one-two-three order in the fifth inning and for the first time since June 30 the Yankees failed to make a single home run.

Slender 11-0 Lead.

After that fourth inning, by which time the Yankees were holding a slender 11-0 lead, the Nats got some inexplicably good pitching. Young Ken Chase, who came up from Chattanooga last week, hurled those last four innings against the Yanks and held 'em to one run, produced by a cheap hit off Lazzeri's bat in the sixth.

Jake Powell, who landed three good socks on Joe Kuhel's chin yesterday, tied that record today. But he was aiming for rightfield when he socked a double in the second inning, a single in the fourth and a double in the sixth, for a near perfect day at bat.

Ferrell began to suffer from double trouble in the second. Young Henrich singled to right, then Powell doubled to right and then Lazzeri doubled to right. A pair of flies brought Lazzeri home and the Yanks had their 3-0 lead. The horrible details of that fourth inning, if you want to know 'em, follow:

Nats Get 2 in Ninth.

Add details that fourth inning: Lazzeri singled to center, scoring Henrich. Ruffing walked. Crosetti forced Lazzeri at third, Powell scoring. Rolfe singled to center, scoring Ruffing.

Recapitulation: Thirteen Yankees went to bat, seven made hits, three walked, eight scored. Hi-de-ho. Ruffing was pretty good for seven innings, holding the Nats ot three hits. Then he collapsed in the eighth. A Nat reached third for the first time during the game.

The Nats' terrific two-run scoring rampage in the ninth happened like this: Travis singled to center, Myer tripled against the right center fence and Jess Hill singled to left. Then Ruffing composed himself and nursed his tender 12-2 lead through the inning without further difficulty.

Navy Tennis Team Defeats Army, 5 to 2; Wins Leech Cup Ninth Time

New York, July 10.—At long last, as we say in our set, the American League is wising up to the salubrious effects of a fist fight on the playing field now and then. Time was when Will Harridge, American League president, considered fisticuffs on the ball field as a horrendous crime comparable to molesting little girls or treason against the United States of America.

POVICH.

But of late Harridge is taking a far saner and much more practical viewpoint. The latest evidence of that was his announcement this morning that he was fining Joe Kuhel and Jake Powell only $25 for mixing it up with the fists at first base in Yankee Stadium yesterday.

• • • •

That isn't punishment, that's encouragement—a thinly veiled ukase to go ahead boys and mix it up on the theory of what can we lose and it sure won't hurt the gate receipts.

Harridge used to deal it out with the mailed fist in matters of this kind. You remember what happened back there in Griffith Stadium in 1932 when Catcher Bill Dickey, of the Yankees, thoughtfully keeping his mask on, landed a jaw-breaking right on the chin of Carl Reynolds of the Nats and knocked him out.

Harridge rose up in all his wrath and slapped a fine on Dickey—not a nominal fine but a $1,000 assessment calculated to forestall any future displays of that kind. Baseball must be kept clean, a game that would be a model for American youth.

And then a year later, when Buddy Myer and Ben Chapman and Earl Whitehill got mixed up in that May Day riot at Griffith Stadium, Harridge cracked down on them, too. He fined 'em each 100 bucks. Strictly commanded that the players themselves, not the club owners, were to pay the fines, and then suspended 'em all for an indefinite period.

He would put a stop to this fighting business, and he did. American League players who may have been in the mood to throw a fist at somebody remembered those stiff fines Harridge was handing out, and then abandoned this idea.

But meanwhile, into the National League, as its president, had come a reformed newspaperman named Ford Frick, who knew the value of a fight as a gate attraction and began to look with more or less favor on these fighting exchanges on the ball field.

Dick Bartell, of the Giants, got mixed up in a fight with some member of the Dodgers whose name I forget, and both players were immediately summoned by Frick. He gave 'em a pretty speech and then fined 'em ten bucks, no kidding.

That was the office for the National Leaguers to start making things exciting, and they did. There were fistic outbreaks almost every day, and Frick apparently had a $10 limit on fines. The National League, with its blood and thunder, was stealing the show from the American League, especially in those towns which had clubs in each circuit.

With the passing of Babe Ruth from the American League, the National with its Dizzy Dean and the gas house gang and its frequent fights on the field began to steal the color from the American. And Mr. Harridge began to wise up.

• • • •

A few weeks ago in Griffith Stadium when Al Simmons, of the Sox, and Bill Knickerbocker, of the Browns, staged the absolutely best fist fight in modern baseball history—a stirring, toe-to-toe affair that in former years might have netted to each of 'em a $500 fine, Harridge let 'em off with a tax of 50 bucks.

• • • •

That was pretty significant of the new viewpoint.

Harridge, himself, was in town a few days after Jake Powell rammed Joe Kuhel at first base in Griffith Stadium and he, by this time was not suffering himself to become wrathful or indignant, asked about what he intended to do about affairs of this kind, especially when they were perpetrated by a notoriously vicious base-runner like Powell, the American League president actually smiled.

"What is there to do," he asked. "Everyone says we ought to have more color in the American League, greater excitement, and the first time it happens, they want me to crack down on the players. I don't see what could be gained by that."

And today again, he proved his consistency when he let both Powell and Kuhel off with those $25 fines. It seems, too, that the league's umpires have their instructions in matters of this kind, because in his official report to Mr. Harridge, Bill Dinneen said that Kuhel struck Powell not deliberately but while he was attempting to get rid of the ball. That was the bunk. Kuhel had long since gotten rid of the ball. But it served the purpose of mitigating the offense—and the fines.

Finally, the league is getting smart.

Welsh, Latona Advance In Osterville Tourney

Osterville, Mass., July 10 (AP).—Barney Welsh, of Rockville, Md., the Nation's sixteenth ranking tennis player, paced eight survivors into the quarter-final round of the Oyster Harbors Club's first invitation tournament today.

Welsh, National Public Parks champion in 1934 and 1935, overcame George M. Goodwin, of Haverhill, 6—2, 6—3, and Norman Drake, of Brookline, 6—3, 6—1. Anthony Latona, of Washington, D. C., also survived the first two rounds to enter the quarter-finals.

Army Wins Only Once In Singles

Muelheisen Downs Lieut. McCue in 3 Sets; Farrin, No. 2, Wins.

By Bob Garrison.

The well-worn groove in Secretary of the Navy Swanson's trophy mantel will not have to be revarnished tomorrow but instead the hug Leech Trophy, symbol of tennis supremacy between the personnel teams of the Army and Navy, will be reset in the same spot it has occupied for the past 11 years.

Navy, by virtue of a 5-to-2 match victory over the Army team, yesterday, on the Army-Navy Country Club courts, retained the cup for the ninth straight time.

Only in two of the seven matches were Army men able to triumph, losing three singles and a pair of doubles matches to the Navy netmen. Army has not won the perpetual trophy since the second year of its existence, 1925.

Led by Lieut. J. M. Farrin, No. 2 man, the sailor team took a 3-to-1 lead when the singles matches had been completed. Only Lieut. John K. McCue, ace sailor player, bowed in the singles play, although he was forced to oppose an unannounced doubles combination. Besides the sterling game of Lieut. Dolf Muelheisen, Army's best, McCue was combatted by the terrific heat, nearly succumbing to its intensity before he bowed to Muelheisen, 4—6, 6—3, 6—1.

Lieut. Farrin, in defeating Lieut. Stanley K. Robinson, No. 2 Army player, treated the gallery of several hundred club spectators to the day's most dramatic match. Farrin and Robinson battled an hour before completing their first set, Farrin finally winning 12-10. After Robinson had held leads of one game three times after games were tied at 5-5 and once was at set point, Robinson lost his service in the twenty-first game and lost to Farrin's to lose the marathon.

The Muelheisen-McCue match was a renewal of a meeting which began in 1932 and was played again the next year. Muelheisen had won the previous engagements, and, until yesterday, had never dropped a set in Leech competition since his debut in 1931.

The stocky, sleek-haired Navy ace won the first set from the Army champion, after going into leads of 3-2 and 5-3. He chased Muelheisen's returns, proved himself capable of getting them, and returned beautiful scross-court shots, scoring many placements. Muelheisen was not on his usual steady game in this set as McCue was careful to keep the ball out of range of his opponent's powerful overhead attack.

Muelheisen Rallies.

In the second set, however, Muelheisen became the same confident, calm racquet wielder that has performed creditably here all summer since he journeyed from March Field, Calif. He chased his prespiring sailor foe from port to starboard with his cross-court backhand drives. After he had built up a 5-1 lead, it was evident that McCue was tiring and would not offer much resistance the rest of the way.

The match was halted in the third set as McCue called repeatedly for soft drinks for relief from the heat. He was completely outmaneuvered in the final set, as Muelheisen banged his overhead volley shots past him to take the set and match, 6—1.

The decisive match was the doubles in which Lieut. G. W. Smith and C. A. Johnson, of the Navy team, defeated Capt. J. H. Drake and Staff Sergt. Samuel Lapsely, 6—2, 6—3. As Army trailed, 3—1, at the conclusion of the singles play, its only hope of victory remained with a clean sweep of the doubles matches, but it was blasted when Drake and Lapsely bowed.

In other singles matches, Lieut. R. W. Dole outclassed his Army opponent, Capt. James Andrew, tall left-hander, sensation of the All-Army tournament, 6—2, 6—2, and Lieut. W. E. Howard, jr., Navy, defeated Lieut. Robertson, 6—3, 6—3.

In other doubles matches, Capt. Andrew and Lieut. P. K. Marrill, jr., dropped the topsail of the Navy duo, Lieuts. McCue and R. W. Dole, 6—4, 6—3, and Lieuts. Farrin and W. E. Howard, jr., downed Muelheisen and Robinson, Army No. 1 team, 4—6, 6—3, 6—4.

Gil Hunt Is Eliminated In Middle Atlantic Play

Philadelphia, July 10 (AP).—Two University of California students, Julius Heldman, of the Los Angeles branch, and Robert Harman, of Berkeley, became finalists today in the Middle Atlantic tennis tournament.

Heldman defeated Robert Kamrath, University of Texas, in a five set duel, 2—6, 6—2, 3—6, 9—7, 6—1. Harmon won 7—5, 6—0, in the first two sets of his semifinal match with Gilbert Hunt, of Washington, 7—5, 6—0, and Hunt defaulted early in the third set.

The final will be played tomorrow.

French Gives Bucs 3 Hits; Cubs on Top

Ex-Pirate Retires 18 Men in Order as Cubs Beat Blanton, 2-0.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, July 10.—Larry French muffled the Pirate bats in a three-hit pitching performance today to give Chicago a 2-to-0 victory which squared the Pittsburgh series.

The Cubs' southpaw star retired in order the first 18 batters to face him in contrast to the Pirates' display of 19 hits yesterday.

Three singles in the seventh again brought Cavaretta loping home.

Blanton yielded six hits and gave up five passes to first in the eight frames he worked.

The Buccaneers threatened only in the eighth when singles by Arky Vaughan and Al Todd and a walk for Pep Young filled the sacks. Fred Schulte, pinch hitting for Blanton, tapped an easy roller which retired the side.

The victory was French's first over a first division club this season. He has won five and lost the same number.

Bucky Walters Blanks Bees; Phils Win, 4-0

Reformed Infielder Hurls Five Hitless Innings and Gives 4 Hits.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, July 10.—Bucky Walters of the Phillies, shut out the Boston Bees, 4 to 0, today on four hits for his ninth victory of the season.

Walters hurled hitless ball for five innings in which only one Boston player, Debs Garms, reached first base. First batter, he received a walk.

While Walters was pitching his second shutout of the season in Boston, his teammates landed on Guy Bush for 11 hits and all their runs.

The Phillies punched home their first run in the fourth inning when Pinky Whitney singled to center after Morris Arnovich had doubled.

Four singles and Warstler's error gave the visitors three runs in the seventh to ice the game. Walters provided the spark in this rally by driving in the first run.

Steele's Scowling Opponent

Williams to Have Big Weight Advantage in Bout With Steele

By Bill McCormick

Freddie Steele must be conceded certain advantages over Charles (Hobo) Williams in experience, skill and general ringmanship, but things will be at least equal for the Alexandria Assassin in other respects when the bell sends him into action against the world's middleweight champion at Griffith Stadium July 20.

Steele generally is considered the greatest two-fisted puncher in the 160-pound division since the days of the immortal Stanley Ketchell, but it is doubtful if he wallops any harder than does Williams. The Hobo's path is strewn with fistic wreckage, ruined by the dynamite in his hamlike fists.

So far as courage is concerned, it is doubtful if even Steele has more heart than Williams. The Hobo actually is afraid of nothing in the world, lest it be the donning of a white collar and a desk job. Rather than being awed at the prospect of facing such a fighter as Steele, Williams is highly gratified at the thought.

"I've deserved a chance for a long time," he explains. "Many good fighters go through their entire careers without getting a chance to leap to the top. I'm lucky, I've got my chance and I'll do my best—which will be enough to make me middleweight champion of the world."

One decided and tangible advantage Williams will have is in the weights. Under his contract for the big bout, Williams cannot weigh more than 163 pounds at noon the day of the fight. At present he weighs exactly 166 pounds, which means that he will make the required poundage and still be able to answer the bell fresh and strong.

Weighing in at 163, after drying out and no eating, Williams will immediately hie himself to the biggest and best steak he can find. That steak, some liquid refreshment and a long nap will send his poudage up to 170 pounds or more at ring time.

Steele, on the other hand, seldom has weighed more than 154 pounds for any bout. When he records that poundage on the official scales, it will be without drying out and all the steaks he can eat after that will not send his weight mounting.

So, when Williams and Steele actually start flinging punches, the Hobo will weigh about 170 pounds, and Freddie will be no more than 154. Sixteen pounds is plenty of weight for a middleweight to concede—even a great middleweight, such as Freddie Steele.

2d Half Play In Industrial Opens Monday

4 Teams Bolstering to Halt Championship Rush of O'Donnell's.

Second-half play in the Industrial League opens this week with four teams bolstering lineups in an attempt to halt the championship drive of O'Donnell's, the first-half winners.

In an effort to halt its decline, Heurich has recruited two outstanding National City players in Willie Silverman, young left-handed pitcher who plays for Gordon, and Ed Luckett, third baseman of Klein's Tavern.

By Walter Haight.

Sh-h-h. Don't look now but there's a "Maryland mob" just over the District line, at Chevy Chase, that has made a big killing—on a race horse. I went out there last night. Old Gang Buster Haight found them. Yes, there was John A. Manfuso, a smiling host, Mrs. Manfuso, a charming matron and little Claudia Manfuso. I didn't round them all up because three other little members of this "mob" are at summer camp.

Claudia, her tiny head alive with curls and her face wreathed with a contagious smile that seems to be the most deadly weapon in the Manfuso household, had scratched one of her toes, probably the one that "cried all the way home." Mrs. Manfuso was examining it but this did not interfere with Claudia's voicing the sentiments of the "mob."

"I like Aneroid. Aneroid daddy's horse. I bet Aneroid—and what do I wirt, daddy?" spoke up Claudia.

If the man who typed those words had got down to figures, studied up on breeding or looked over the record of Aneroid before the Suburban Handicap, he could have seen that Aneroid needed only to run his race to win.

A Sensational Race.

It was a sensational race that Aneroid made the New York pressbox swallow that day at Belmont. Backed down from 18-1 to 10-1 in the betting, Aneroid bounded to the front and reeled off amazing time. Asking little more than guiding from Jockey Charlie Rosengarten, Aneroid sped the first 6 furlongs in 1:11 1-5, time good enough to beat the best at that distance. He went on to a mile in 1.35 4-5, a second off the world record.

At a mile and an eighth, Aneroid was clocked at 1.48 3-5, just two-fifths of a second off the world record. Then, with no competition and his nearest rival five lengths behind, Aneroid completed the mile and a quarter in 2.01 3-5, the third fastest time for that distance in the history of the American turf.

But what about this Aneroid? Was the horse that seems destined to be the handicap champion of 1937 always regarded as a great race horse? How did the rather turf obscure Manfuso come into such a horse? Are not those bigtime horses, those champions of champions reserved for the Whitneys, the duPonts and the Vanderbilts?

Just Plain Luck?

Let's go back to a day at the Laurel track. Manfuso, Washington manufacturing chemist, was on his way down to the ticket window to make a killing with a $2-bill. His friend, Trainer Dian Kerr, met him. "John," he said (and to this day Manfuso will tell you that Kerr said a mouthful), "there's going to be a sale of horses at Walnut Hall. Want to look the book over?"

Manfuso took the pamphlet describing the horses, jammed it in his pocket and that evening found it surrounded by losing tickets. He turned the pages and, having a sort of yen for horse breeding, began running over the ancestors of the various horses. On page 8 appeared the name "Aneroid." Manfuso noted that he was by The Porter out of Outburst. He said to himself, "Why I believe I'll bid up to $500 for that youngster."

When Aneroid was led into the ring he looked far from the picture horse he is today. He had a large "splint," or growth, on the inside of one leg. It had been "fired," peppered with a hot iron some two weeks before and the leg was discolored with iodine. But both Trainer Kerr and Owner-to-be Manfuso had faith that Aneroid would grow into a sound horse regardless.

Nice Weather, Eh?

The expert representatives of the biggest stables looked over Aneroid which had been deemed of no great value by some adviser to John Hay Whitney, the owner. They looked over the leg and went on discussing the weather.

A half-hearted "$50" opened the bidding. Kerr, bidding for Manfuso, stepped it up to $100. Then came "$150" from the opposition and Kerr went to $200. A bid of $250 brought "$300" from Kerr. His rival turned away as the auctioneer went into the usual, "Going, going, gone—to this man, $300."

As Kerr and Manfuso looked over Aneroid, Clifton's Agnes, a filly which races now at Charles Town, Marlboro, etc., was led into the ring.

Manfuso admitted last night that he had the half-milers in mind when he finally got Aneroid in a stall. He said he had a mental picture of himself being announced over the loud speaker at Cumberland after Aneroid had won the $500 Inaugural Purse and his accepting the silver plate emblematic of victory.

Turned Down Profit.

Had he so desired, Manfuso could have made a profit of $450 an hour after he purchased the colt. A well-known veterinary met him as he was leaving the auction and offered him $750 for Aneroid. Manfuso did some quick thinking. He reasoned that if Aneroid was worth $750 to someone else, it was just possible that he might be worth more to Manfuso.

"Mobman" Manfuso did not realize for some time that he had a stake horse. Trainer Kerr brought him to the races and Aneroid showed only the part of an ordinary 2-year-old. He eventually won a $2,000 claiming race at a $34.60 mutuel. A trainer, who now operates on the smaller tracks, swears that he was going to "take" Aneroid that day but missed the train to Baltimore.

A winning effort at Thorncliffe was Aneroid's only other accomplishment of note as a 2-year-old. Shortly after that, he bruised his foot and it was while recuperating that a veterinary discovered a flaw in the make-up of the colt. It was found that Aneroid had contracted hoofs on his front legs. This had the same effect on the colt as a pair of tight shoes on a man. It was decided to resort to an old trotting horse remedy. Springs were inserted to spread the heels.

Wins Great Race.

It was the following summer that Manfuso realized that he owned a star in Aneroid. With the contracted hoofs relieved, Aneroid came into his own with a truly great race at Suffolk Downs. Hard held at the end and with an apprentice rider in the saddle, Aneroid stepped a mile and 70 yards in 1:41 2-5, only three-fifths of a second off the world record. Manfuso immediately bought insurance on the colt.

Aneroid followed this race with another sensational win. This time he was opposed by the best sprinters that could be lured to Narragansett Park, Sation, Cycle, Bill Farnsworth, Appealing and others—a field of 17. The group, the largest ever to run in one race in New England, was at the post 22 minutes. When the break came, it was Aneroid on top and Aneroid all the way. The official timer said Aneroid had covered the 6 furlongs in 1:11 2-5, but a private clocker caught him in 1:10 2-5.

Aneroid pulled up a trifle sore after the race and was not asked for speed again until Bowie. Then he turned in a victory, going 6 furlongs in 1:12 2-5, the fastest time of the meeting. That was last November.

During his winter stay over by Middleburg, Va., the spring-in-the-heel treatment was given Aneroid in a more thorough manner.

At the April meeting at Bowie, this year, Aneroid went into a sprint a heavy favorite and, despite being off poorly, he came from behind in the mud to win going away while running easily. At Havre de Grace he trimmed an excellent field in the Harford Handicap at 6 furlongs. Moving over to Pimlico, he repeated in the Baltimore Spring Handicap, another 6-furlong race.

Then came the Dixie Handicap, a defeat, but a lesson to Trainer Kerr and Owner Manfuso.

Jockey Rosengarten was instructed to hold Aneroid under restraint while within striking distance of the pacemakers to the stretch and then put him to a drive and go on to win. Rosengarten followed instructions, but when he turned Aneroid loose, he was bumped by Calumet Dick, the ultimate winner. Before he could recover, Aneroid had been shunted into third position with Finance nosing him out for the place money. Had Aneroid been second, it is probable that Calumet Dick would have been disqualified.

After the race, Rosengarten, who has ridden Aneroid in all his big races, told Kerr that he had a hard time trying to hold Aneroid in check. "I believe this horse can go to the top and stay there," said Charlie. "Why, I was choking him all the way to the stretch."

The Dixie was a distance race and there was much criticism, written and oral of Kerr and Manfuso for "spoiling a good sprinter by trying to make him go a long route."

Trailed By Rosemont.

It was the "Maryland mob" race that followed—the Suburban Handicap in which Aneroid fairly ate up the ground. Rosengerten's instructions this time were to get Aneroid to the top as soon as possible and stay there if he could. He did both and behind him trailed Rosemont, winner of the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap; Memory Book, Esposa and the other greats of the handicap division.

From a gruelling mile and a quarter, Aneroid went into the Carter handicap at seven furlongs and carrying 123 pounds, the heaviest weight assignment of his career to date. Aneroid was eight lengths behind turning for home but won going away. He was clocked in 1:23 3-5, three-fifths of a second off the track record. This time he was trailed by Jay Jay, Sergt. Byrne and the upper-rust of sprintdom.

Then came his most recent race, the Brooklyn Handicap, and as thrilling a stretch battle as Belmont Park has ever witnessed. A dog-eat-dog battle with Seabiscuit. First one and then the other in front in the stretch, Rosengarten hand-riding for all he was worth and Pollard whipping Seabiscuit as if his very life depended upon it. Came a photo finish. The camera failed to get the horse on the wire but it was used in deciding the outcome. The winner was Seabiscuit by not more than the width of a slice of bologna.

Since, Aneroid has been taking a well earned rest. His plans for the immediate future do not include any races at Delaware Park, press agents to the contrary. He may go postward in one of the several stakes for which he is eligible at Saratoga. His present real objective is the $50,000 added Massachusetts Handicap at Suffolk Downs where the Manfuso-Kerr-Rosengarten combination expects him to turn the tables on Seabiscuit. After that, it will be the $25,000 added Narragansett Special.

At Handicappers' Mercy.

If Aneroid is to be the champion, he is to be a running champion, Manfuso said last night. He admits that Aneroid is now at the mercy of the handicappers. He will run Aneroid as long as those who have the say do not pile too much weight on him. Manfuso believes Aneroid, with his stocky build can carry poundage with the best of them, but he does not intend to break down the horse with too much lead.

What about the $100,000 added Santa Anita Handicap? Well, Manfuso is not counting his horses before they hatch but the turf's largest purse looks good to him and, if luck is with Aneroid, he probably will march postward next winter in the shadow of the Mount Baldy.

Manfuso's eyes sparkled and his thoughts probably rushed ahead to the stud days of Aneroid as he explained the breeding of his star. Aneroid is bred of the same stock as War Admiral, winner of the Preakness and the Derby, but along different lines. If you can follow me, it is thuswise: Aneroid's dam, Outburst, is by Messenger, which is by Fair Play, and Fair Play is the sire of Man O'War which sired War Admiral. Ben Brush is the sire of Sweep which sired The Porter, the stallion of Aneroid, Sweep also sired Brushup, the dam of War Admiral. Thus War Admiral gets the Fair Play blood on his sire's side while Aneroid gets it on his dam's side. War Admiral gets the Ben Brush blood on his dam's side while Aneroid gets it on his sire's side. Aneroid is a three-parts brother to E. B. McLean's one-time star, Toro.

Bred to Run.

But there is no doubt that Aneroid was bred to run. He is a perfect gentleman in his actions. A quiet, obedient horse at the post, Aneroid is also a quick breaker and has never failed to break on top when asked to.

Manfuso is high in the praise of Trainer Kerr, who as an amateur steeplechase rider was the Regan McKinney of his day. Kerr rode over the fences while wearing glasses and, despite his many falls, was not seriously cut by the glasses which broke several times.

Aneroid, the $300 horse that has won more than $45,126, is the "people's horse." Manfuso, Kerr and Jockey Rosengarten have no big betting connections. Twenty dollars is a big bet for any of them. It has been noted by writers that Aneroid always seems "overlayed," or his odds are better than they should be for his record. The answer is that the public is making his price. There are no big commissions coming from the handlers as in the case of many star horses.

A factor in the good odds generally obtained on Aneroid is the bandages on his front legs. Manfuso explained that the horse's long stride caused him to hit his front legs with his hind hoofs and it was found that with bandages this was corrected. The bandages lead the uninformed to believe that he may be unsound in his front legs.

Yes, there's a "Maryland mob" out Chevy Chase way. I ran them down last night.

Sh-h-h. Don't look now but he's the leader of the "mob" that put over the "big killing" with a race horse.

From Tee To Green

BY MERRELL WHITTLESEY

Mr. and Mrs. Gus H. Golf Fan, of the Washington links public, have a treat in store for them on Sunday afternoons as Wiffy Cox and professionals from seven other local clubs make their weekly visits with the double exhibition matches at the various courses.

WHITTLESEY.

The boys are really going to put on a show, the group, which at present includes Cox, Roland MacKenzie, George Diffenbaugh, Bob Barnett, Cliff Spencer, Al Treder, Leo Walper and Mel Shorey and will be substituted by the host pro at his club, are all capable of good golf and are well worth the 18-hole trek from 3 to 6 on a Sabbath evening.

It's no secret that the boys are benefiting themselves with this little idea from a business standpoint, but it's also no secret that a lot of good golf can be seen and pointers picked up in addition to rooting for your favorite pro.

With each pro posting a five spot toward the sweepstakes ante and the club boosting it with a little contribution, the man that has a hot round can make it a profitable afternoon as he also picks up a few side bets from his foursome.

They're going to work hard, and to make every stroke count and place an added incentive on the medal play, the low medal average will come in for a sizeable pot when they adjourn the matches around the middle of October.

They'll hole all putts and if you want to see a big shot take nine whacks on an easy par four hole, he'll have to do it or else forfeit his right to sharing in the final medal prize.

The series of matches is an innovation and Whiffy, sponsor of the plan, expects to see it picked up throughout the country within the next few years. The local troupe should gather a local following, and with the co-operation of the host club members a gallery of 1,000 or more would be a token of appreciation by local links fans for an afternoon's profitable entertainment.

Next year if you, you and your club members aid in making this venture a success, the idea will graduate to a scale where the boys will put on a show of how to execute the various shots before the match. They'll rehearse the wholesale lessons several times in a week and a spokesman for the group will explain how they play every shot in the bag.

In the matches played to date, Cox and MacKenzie whipped Spencer and Barnett twice, but how. The first time when Wiffy canned a 40-footer on the last hole at Beaver Dam and last week on the twenty-fourth hole at Kenwood when Barnett and Spencer finally ran out of pars.

Diffenbaugh and Treder won 4 and 3 over Shorey and Walper, but shot a best ball of 65, Diffenbaugh shooting a 70 and Treder a 71. Spencer shot a 70 and Cox 71 in the first match, and all putts were holed.

In Cox the city is fortunate in having one of the country's well liked pros, who has won or placed in virtually every big tourney excepting the Open and P. G. A. He was a former member of the Ryder Cup team. Noted for his wisecracks that enliven his foursome, Wiffy was followed by a gallery of some 2,000 people in one day's play of the recent True Temper Open.

MacKenzie, the Congressional mentor, is another member of an international team, having played on a victorious Walker Cup team with Bobby Jones. Leo Walper, the driving range owner, made several creditable showings on the winter tour that Sam Snead gained stardom on last year.

The other five need no introduction to local golfers as the duration of their respective positions are a tribute to their ability. To insure a new show every week, a committee of newspapermen has been named to arrange the pairings. New faces and new teams will enliven the matches.

The pros are doing their part to sponsor golf; it is up to the golfers, fans, and prospective players to encourage them with their attendance. The Shawnee Open prevents their continuance this week but next week at Manor come on out, even if just for nine holes and bring that fellow whose locker's next to yours.

The Middle-Atlantic Association of Greenskeepers will hold a meeting tomorrow at Congressional, with a flag tournament carded at 1 p. m. and a general discussion following a dinner at 5:30 p. m.

Robert Wrestles Here on Thursday

Yvon Robert, one-time claimant to the heavyweight wrestling championship, will return to the wars at Griffith Stadium next Thursday night against one Reb Russell in a one fall to a finish match.

Robert, one of the better wrestlers, was doing very well with his claims to the title until he stumbled and broke his leg in a match against Cliff Olsen here.

Before becoming a professional grappler, Yvon was an all-round high school and college athlete, excelling in swimming, hockey, baseball, rugby and on the amateur mat.

Tenri DeGlane, a former champion, induced Robert to enter the professional grunting ranks and four years later Yvon had established a definite claim to the championship. He weighs 220 pounds, stands 6 feet 1 and has beaten such as the late Jim Browning, Ed Don George, Joe Savoldi, Dean Detton and Danno O'Mahoney.

Crack Milers Renew Feud At New York

Woodruff Challenges San Romani, Cunningham in Labor Games.

New York, July 10 (AP).—Headlined by Johnny Woodruff's invasion of the mile run against the event's specialty men, Glenn Cunningham and Archie San Romani, the second annual world labor athletic carnival will be held tomorrow, with records possible in almost every competition.

On the lightning-fast track of Randall's Island, the great Negro star from Pittsburgh will get his first major mile test against Cunningham, world record holder at 4:06.7, and San Romani, who beat the Kansas running machine at Princeton and led him in the Nationals at Milwaukee, only to fall.

Possessed of a stride calculated close to 10 feet, the elongated Woodruff was running a 4.19 mile as a schoolboy, but gave it up as a serious goal for the 800 meters, which he won in the 1936 Olympics.

Forest towns, Olympic high hurdle champion from Georgia, is gunning for Allan Tolmick, of Wayne University, double National A. A. U. hurdle titlist, in the 120-yard barrier race. Tolmich handed "Spec" his first defeat in two years at the Milwaukee A. A. U. meet.

Ben Johnson, New York Curb Exchange flyer and triple I. C. 4-A leader, wants to redeem himself against the gigantic L. Perrin Walker, Georgian representing the New York A. C. at 100 yards. It was Walker who whipped the field at Milwaukee, leading Johnson home by a foot. Walker, 6 feet 5 inches tall, has a 9½-foot stride and plenty of what it takes in the century. He won the event last year.

Cornelius Johnson, Olympic high jump champ, and Dave Albritton, of Ohio State, also are slated to wage another thrilling duel. The two tie each other on almost every jump although Johnson won the Olympic title and Albritton gained some revenge by outjumping him at Milwaukee.

Tremendous interest also centered in the pole vault with the Nation's greatest pole men trying to shatter the world record. Bill Sefton, the 14 feet 11 inch performer from the University of Southern California, will face Cornelius Warmerdam, Fresno State runner-up in the Nationals, and George Varoff, of the San Francsico Olympic Club, which may see the first 15 feet pole vault ever made in competition. Varoff holds the accepted world's record of 14 feet 6½ inches.

Motorcycle Race Scheduled Today

The second T. T. race of the season sponsored by the National Capitol Motorcycle Club will be held today at Marlow's Farm. The first race is scheduled to start at 2 p. m. The course is located 6 miles north of Silver Spring on the road to Olney.

There will be 10 events on the program, starting with one-lap time trials to decide starting positions. Then will follow five qualifying heats, of four men in four laps; semi-final A, 10 men, 6 laps; semi-final B, 10 men, 6 laps and the final event, 10 men, 10 laps. A consolation of six laps will close the program.

'Iron Lou,' Medwick Keep Batting Leads

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 10.—Although they're still a long way from over-hauling Muscles Medwick and his big war club, the Chicago Cubs, are making a personal party of the National League hitting race these days.

Frank Demaree and Gabby Harnett are the latest members of the Grimm cast to break into the loop's list of ten leading hitters, thereby giving the Chicagoans four places in the select set, just double the number any other club in the league can boast.

While Medwick was boosting his first-place average from .405 to .409 during the week ended with Friday's games, and Pittsburg's pounding Paul Waner was strengthening his hold on second with .394, each of the four Chicago clouters among the leaders also bettered his position.

Hartnett, having one of his customary good years, took over third place with a .385 mark by passing the minimum at-bat deadline to make the top ten. Billy Herman, the crack second-sacker, climbed from sixth to a tie for fourth with Pittsburgh's Arky Vaughan, each with .361. Herman hit safely 12 times in 28 chances during the week.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Langley, Va., July 10.—The Independence Day celebration of July 4 will be continued today. By request, the part that was prevented by rain will be run as scheduled. Events included a sea horse race, bridle-path ethics, general horsemanship demonstration, tournament, sulky race and a running race.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 10.—Two of the New York Yankees' brightest stars, beteran Lou Gehrig and Young Joe DiMaggio, rode the crest of a wave of heavy hitting in the American League during the past week.

Gehrig, according to official figures, which include games of Friday, held the league leadership with an average of .378, representing a gain of 8 points over his mark of the previous seven days. The brilliant DiMaggio, in addition to crashing out five home runs during the week, bludgeoned his way from a spot outside the circuit's "first ten" to third place, with a mark of .359.

Gerald Walker, the Detroit outfielder, boosted himself from third to second place by picking up five points which gave him a mark of .360, while Cecil Travis, the Washington infielder, added four points to a .355 average. Charlie Gehringer, the Detroit keystone artist, held his average even during the week, his mark of .353 giving him a tie for fifth place with Sammy West, of St. Louis.

Local Party Lands Large WhiteMarlin

Hardheads, Weaks Being Caught in Numbers at Gloucester Point, Va.

By Bill Ackerman.

That bunch of fishermen, who during working hours attend to the business of the Super Concrete Corporation in Georgetown, are having a hard time these days to keep their minds on what it takes to let them go fishing, for on Thursday two of them, E. S. Simpson and John Redd, with Henry Marshall as a guest, journeyed down to Ocean City, Md., to fish for the famous Jack Spot with Capt. Crawford Savage on his Hilda.

Leaving the dock at 7 in the morning for the long run, it was exactly noon when John Redd got his first strike. Due to the hook being set far back in the side of his mouth, it was two hours later before the ninety-two pound white marlin was boated.

Marshall and Simpson both had savage strikes, both of which were missed before the latter hooked on to an eighty pounder that required an even hour to land.

Blues Still Running.

Ocean City continues to be the one bright place for bluefishing. The catches all last week were running from eighty to nearly twice that to the boat. One Washington party, Charles Harnish, N. Gamon and Joseph F. Hughes, caught 140. Not quite so large as they have been, but well worth going after.

These scrappy finsters have stopped biting all down the Virginia shore despite the fact that they started off in fine shape this season and at this time should be going good. There are plenty of them on the Middles but they seem to have not the slightest inclination to bite. We haven't even had the early catches of a few in late May and early June to let everyone know they were there, so that the fishermen might sweat and stew until late August, when they usually start taking the lures in the fashion that brings joy to the hearts of even old hardened anglers.

Plenty of Weaks.

The best report that we can get from Capt. T. S. Clopton from Gloucester Point, Va., is plenty of hardheads and some weakfish. Blues haven't been striking there for the last three weeks.

Capt. Bob Lee at Shadyside is having a tough time of it with that shoal of rock. His boats are following it almost continuously. Some days they will strike and then there are others that although they rise in fine shape, the lures have no fascination whatsoever for them. On good days the catches run from twenty to fifty and they are usually caught early in the morning. Don't forget to take a good assortment.

Picking up the trip of the Joann where we left her back of Millers Wharf, far up Smiths Creek, to recuperate from a squally evening spend under Piney Point the Fourth was spent sleeping, catching a few tiny hardheads and spot against the inability to pick a dozen or so of soft crabs, not for bait but to grace the table, and watching the squalls that come from every direction throughout the day.

It was not until late afternoon that the crabs arrived, by way of a wet and bedraggled darky sculling a skiff that matched its decrepit owner in every way, and then there were only five of them. Short fare indeed for four hungry wayfarers. Nothing to do but dig down in the lazarette for the old standby—beans.

Up at 5 o'Clock.

At 5 in the morning, with the hope that the sun would burn through the heavy haze that blanketed us from every quarter, Joann eased out the placid waters of the creek in company with a small cruiser with a jovial crew of five, and a small glassed-in boat that appeared of the vintage 1900, and headed for the Potomac bell buoy, 14 miles below. The slight tailwind and two-knot tide aiding, rounded the "bell" in 50 minutes flat, but how different running through the rip on the bay side and heading into that same tide.

With Point No Point Light under the stern, and the weather so heavy again, it was decided to run on up to Cedar Point and stay at Solomons instead of making a short visit with our old friends in St. Jeromes Creek.

At Cedar Point the little cruiser headed on up the bay while the old-timer took to the west side of the Patuxent and was lost to us as a traveling companion.

Subject Debated.

The subject—to fish, or not to fish—was thoroughly debated before deciding on going in to Lore's dock and get bonafide information on the exact location where they were biting best.

That finished the fishing for the day and it was put back for the evening, for chewing the fat with this captain and that, it was time for chow. With that over, Commodore Joe Lore (that is his rating now. He is commodore of the newly organized and sanctioned Solomons Island Yacht Club) with Mrs. Lore came down and showed us a Solomons that with all our visits we have never seen.

Watching the boats come in with the catches is a lot of fun, but it is also hard on the rest, so at midnight it was given the go-by and all hands turned to for a little shut-eye, that while seemingly so easy to get, is the thing that you get the least of.

The Skipper's Log

By Dan Craig.

Harold S. Vanderbilt's Ranger was definitely selected as the defender for the America's Cup last week, which surprised exactly no one, although the actual trials for the selection had for the most part yet to be sailed.

From the beginning of the preliminary trials it seemed to be all Ranger. Gerard Lambert's Yankee has been badly outclassed in the latest trials by both Ranger and Chandler Hovey's Rainbow. The smaller fore triangle and single jib so far has not proved much advantage to the Boston boat, although with a fine assortment of light canvas she has always been fast before the wind.

Wind 15 Miles.

Never during the preliminary or actual trials has the wind exceeded 15 miles, and usually it was less than that, varying between seven and ten miles. But it was a fair average of summer airs and proved definitely the superiority of Ranger and Rainbow with their big "quad" overlapping jibs over Yankee's new rig.

This year the actual America's Cup Series will begin off Newport July 31, more than a month earlier than usual, in order that the big class "J" yachts may take part in the New York Yacht Club cruise August 16-24, and sail "race week" off the Eastern Yacht Club off Marblehead August 28-September 2.

Regattas for local yachtsmen this week-end are by now ancient history.

The Star-Spangled Banner Regatta at Maryland Yacht Club, in Baltimore, which ends a two-day program today, featured the week-end program. Six Washington comets and almost the entire West River fleet are competing. It would be almost safe to say D. Verner Smythe's Sassy Too won in the comet class yesterday afternoon and Osborn Owing's Vanitie took the 20-foot "free-for-all," but we'll refrain.

First Regatta.

The Washington Canoe Club held its first regatta at home yesterday, playing host to the Cacawa Canoe Club, of Tacony, Pa., and the Philadelphia Canoe Club.

Crews from the Potomac Boat Club are out on the river daily training for the Middle States Regatta at Baltimore, September 5. Potomac is daily expecting a challenge from the Old Dominion Boat Club in Alexandria, and members are mumbling that the Old Dominion oarsmen are afeared of them this year. Hum!

George Shorb, ranking canoeist at the club, is organizing a canoe team to compete against the Alexandria club in the two annual challenge regattas. Old Dominion challenges first and Potomac follows, usually the first week after Labor Day.

Big annual regattas on the bay looked forward to by local yachtsmen are rounding out their programs. The Chester River Yacht and Country Club announces its annual affair will be held July 30 and 31. Friday, July 30, will be entirely devoted to sailing events with races scheduled for: Sail boats over 20 feet, 20 feet and under skipjacks, barnegats, comets, dusters, moths, snipes, albatrosses, frost bite dinghys, scrappy cats and the famous Chesapeake log-sailing canoes. In the "free-for-all" divisions 20 feet and over, 20 feet and under, boys' and girls' under 15 years, and sailboats 15 feet and under are included.

Outboard Races.

On Saturday, the thirty-first, outboard, 225, 135 and 91 cubic inch hydros, and free-for-all runabouts will race under rules and regulations of the American Power Boat Association.

The largest and most important regatta on the yachtsmen's calendar is the "St. Mikes," or Miles River-St. Michaels meet. One of the biggest rendezvous on the bay for yachts and yachtsmen of all types and breed, this regatta schedules events for almost every class of boat that sails or is driven by power. Chesapeake log canoes will be on the program and total entries call for 172 events.

Next week-end the Havre de Grace Yacht Club will hold its annual regatta on the Susquehanna River. All types of speedboats, outboards and classes for small sailboats in addition to swimming races and the Susquehanna Bushwhack rowing race for single sculls combine for a total schedule of 24 events.

Calling All Dogs

By Albert Payson Terhune

For part of three winter months I am forced to live in New York City. My study is at the front of our Riverside drive apartment. I waste much of my work time watching the daily exercising of neighborhood dogs. Glumly, on a leash a Great Dane or a police dog or a collie or a bird dog plods along.

It is then that I remember the 40 acres of lawn and meadow with woodland and hillslope at Sunnybank, where my own collies romp and gallop wildly, and the miles of forest and mountains behind Sunnybank, where they take their long daily rambles with me. Five minutes of tearingly rapid running, up and down hill, are worth more to them than would be three miles of solemn pacing along the pavements at the end of a leash. My dogs exercise every muscle and sinew in their active bodies. They could not do that during a dull promenade on a sidewalk.

City dwellers are shortening their big dogs' lives and wrecking their systems by the false form of life they compel them to lead.

I have written something of this before. I intend to write more about it from time to time. It is a theme that calls for much repetition.

Don't keep a big dog in a big city. I would sooner shoot one of my own collies than to bring him here to town from the miles of freedom he enjoys at home. Think it over.

You have seen him trotting along. Or you have seen him drop in at your kitchen door for a handout. He has even elected himself, temporarily, a member of your family. Then, presently, he wanders once more.

He is the "foot-loose dog," not the hapless strayed animal who has lost his master in a crowd or whom fate has tossed into the cold world far from the home he longs for and cannot find. No. He is not an object of pity, this foot-loose dog. At least, not until some car kills him or some dog-catcher gathers him in, one of these two climaxes being his usual fate, in course of time, just as the workhouse and the potter's field are the ultimate destinations of the human tramp.

Certain dogs are born to wander, no matter how happy their homes. They are born runaways. Once in a while a smooth-coated fox terrier is one of these. Not always, yet sometimes. The foot-loose trait, though, is not confined exclusively to any one breed. And I don't know of any certain cure for the habit. I have been asked about it by many of you. All I can say is that there are humans who are born tramps; and certain dogs who have the same incessant itch to wander.

June Business In Washington 5% Above May

Business in Washington at the end of June had shown a increase of 5 per cent over May, according to the monthly survey of 147 trading areas of the United States, conducted by the research department of Brooke, Smith, French & Dorrance, of New York.

Resisting successfully the pressure of strikes in industrial areas, business activity showed only 1 per cent decline in June, bringing the index of national business to 4 per cent below normal at the close of the month. The 4 per cent below normal mark arrived at during June compares with 3 per cent below normal during May and 14 per cent below normal during June, last year.

"The national business picture shows continued strength," the survey report states. "Trading centers in oil producing regions made noteworthy gains over May, as did also the lumber areas of the South and West."

Of the 147 trading areas, the report states that 66 registered gains and 63 losses. In 18 areas business conditions remained at the same level as in May. Of the 66 which showed better conditions, 16 gained 4 per cent or more over the previous month. There are now 56 areas where conditions are either normal or above normal.

Acacia Assets Gain 3 Million In Six Months

Insurance in Force Rises 9 Million to Total of 374 Million.

Record progress was achieved by the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co. during the first six months of this year, William Montgomery, president, reported last night. The gains made by Acacia both during the six months' period and in June were among the most impressive in the company's history, he said.

"During the first six months of 1937," he added, "Acacia's insurance in force rose to $374,000,000, an increase of more than $9,000,000. This is an increase of 60 per cent over the gain registered in the corresponding period of 1936.

"The company's assets now stand at $70,000,000, a figure which reflects a $3,000,000 increase achieved during the first half of this year.

Pair-For Business.

"Of great significance as indices both of Acacia's progress and of the soundness of the general economic situation are figures covering paid-for business and conservation. In the first six months Acacia's paid-for business totaled more than $20,000,000, a gain of more than $1,000,000 over the same period of last year. And we have made a further 20 per cent improvement in our conservation rate; which means that Acacia has reduced its lapsations by that substantial percentage. Also, our statistical analysis shows that at present the volume of policy loans is normal, again indicating the steady betterment in general business conditions.

"The six months' record is fully reflected in the figures for June, and it is additionally noteworthy that during June Acacia issued approximately 2,000 policies, the largest number in any single month for the past eight years.

"On the basis of the accomplishments of the first six months Acacia is confident that the year as a whole will prove to be outstandingly successful in every field of company endeavor."

Curb Prices Sag In Dull Trading

New York, July 10 (AP).—Buoyancy was lacking in curb market trading today as most shares sagged to lower levels. Business was practically at a standstill during the short session with many traders "out of town for the week-end."

Utilities were a target as quiet but persistent selling forced them down. American Gas & Electric gave up 1¼ to close at 33, United Gas and Niagara Hudson buckled slightly while Electric Bond & Share kept level.

Interest in oils was negligible with little movement either way. Creole Petroleum finished at 38¼, up a minor fraction and Gulf Oil lost ½ to end at 55¾. Sunray Oil was unchanged.

A few industrial specialties bucked the downdrift scoring slight gains. Carrier Corporation was up a major fraction and Niles-Bement-Pond climbed ¼. Cleveland Tractor closed at 14⅝, up ⅛.

Leaning backward were American Cyanamid "B," Technicolor, St. Regis Paper and Cities Service.

Transfers totaled 73,000 shares compared with sales at the last short session two weeks ago of 74,000 shares.

Wash. Loan & Trust Votes 2% Dividend

Directors of Washington Loan & Trust Co. have declared a quarterly dividend of 2 per cent payable August 2 to stockholders of record July 23.

Stock Market Yields to Heat; Apathy Rules Week-end Session

Mild Recovery Movement Sets in Near Close; Government Bonds Firm; Wheat Futures Weak.

By Frederick Gardner,

Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, July 10.—Stocks suffered more from inattention than selling pressure in today's market. Brokers blamed the current heat wave for driving many customers from the boardrooms. Even those who appeared displayed more than the usual buying apathy.

With some traders desiring to lighten commitments over the week-end, prices drifted fractions to a point or more lower. There was a mild recovery movement near the close and extreme declines were reduced in many instances. Transactions for the two-hour session aggregated 297,500 shares. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .3 of a point at 67.1.

Listlessness of the proceedings was exemplified by the fact only 560 issues changed hands as against 825 yesterday. There were 159 advances, 242 declines and 159 were unchanged.

Steels followed the rest of the market notwithstanding labor news was more to the liking of he financial district. U. S. Steel was off ½ at 108⅜ and Bethlehem ¾ at 90⅛. Republic edged up ⅛ at 39 as a strike called at one of the company's plants failed to materialize. Sloss-Sheffield was up 2 at 161

As the final gong sounded the U. S. Steel Corp. announced its June shipments were the best for the month since 1929, although somewhat under the May total.

Graham-Paige Active.

Graham-Paige was the liveliest stock of the day, advancing ⅜ of a point to 4, on reports of expanding business and word Sears Roebuck would invade the tractor field by handling Graham-Paige machines.

The government's crop report, indicating the best wheat harvests since 1931, was good news for granger railroads, mail orders and farm implements, but most of these held to a narrow range.

On the downside were Chrysler at 103, Westinghouse 147⅛, American Telephone 168⅜, Western Union 48¼, Santa Fe 81¼, Southern Pacific 46⅞, Kennecott 58⅜, American Smelting 91¼, Loew's 80, Du Pont 154 and U. S. Rubber 60½.

General Motors was unchanged at 53. Allis-Chalmers was up 1 at 67¾ on plans for broadening manufacting facilities. Improved were Montgomery Ward at 60⅞, Great Northern 51½, American Can 101¾ and Consolidated Edison 36½.

Commodities were lower. Wheat at Chicago lost 1 to 1¾ cents a bushel and corn was down ⅜ to up as much. Cotton dropped 70 to 85 cents a bale. The principal foreign currencies were up in terms of the dollar.

Bond Market Narrow.

Narrowness and quiet trading characterized today's bond market. Turnover was extremely small with trader's ranks thinned as a result of the torrid weather.

Fluctations in most groups were confined to fractions. Government issues steered a quiet course with minor gains predominating. Swings were confined to 5-32 or the upside and 1-32 the other way.

Some utilities scored modest advances. Railroad loans were steady with a firm undertone. International Hydro Electric 6s climbed a point to 77½ and Utilities Power & Light 5½s gained 1¼ to close at 56. Chicago & Northwestern 4¾s held even while Erie 5s dropped ½ to end at 75.

Alleghany Corporation liens, a feature of recent markets following announcement of a plan of consolidation with Chesapeake Corporation, were less prominent, although the 5s of 1949 closed at 92, up 1.

Approximately $2,814,000 face value of bonds changed hands, compared with $4,561,000 on the previous two-hour session on June 26.

The Associated Press average for 20 rails was unchanged as also were the averages for 10 utilities. For 10 industrials gained .1 of a point to 102.9.

Foreign dollar obligations were quiet with moves generally confined to small limits. Rome 6½s dropped over a point. Some South American issues eased fractionally. Norwegian loans improved a little.

U. S. Steel Corp. Sets 8-Year June Record

New York, July 10 (AP).—June shipments of finished steel products reported today by U. S. Steel Corporation totaled 1,268,-50 tons, largest for any June since 1929, when shipments were 1,385,506 tons. June shipments showed a decline of 35,489 tons under May, but were 382,485 tons above June, 1936.

Imports of Gold Drop During Week

The Commerce Department reported yesterday that gold imports totaled $40,993,740 during the week ended July 2, a decline of $20,000,000 under the previous week.

Silver imports totaled $1,740,682 and $2,241,184 for the respective weeks. Gold and silver exports were negligible.

Week's New Financing Only $14,132,185

New York, July 10 (AP).—New financing in the week ended July 8 slipped to a low level compared with the previous week when new issues were over the $100,000,000 mark. The total this week was $14,-132,185 compared with $45,387,940 in the same week last year, Poor's Publishing Co. reported today.

Municipal issues were the most numerous while industrial financing scored the highest total.

Bituminous Production.

The National Coal Association estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended July 3, 1937 as approximately 7,275,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week: 1936—6,481,000 tons; 1935—2,579,000 tons.

Foreign Markets.

Liverpool, July 10 (AP).—Wheat futures reacted on the bearish American Government report and closed 1¼d to 1½d lower. Good rains were reported in Manitoba and milling demand was small.

Cotton futures closed 2 to 7 points higher. Bombay selling and scattered profit-taking encountered speculative outside buying. Week-end realising developed on the bulges.

London and Paris closed.

Industry's Gain Is 25% Over 1936 Half Year

Indications Are That Rise Will Not Hold for Current Period.

New York, July 10.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co. says today:

"All in all, the general business picture is by no means unpromising. The wide gains scored by industrial production during the first six months of this year, during which aggregate industrial activity showed a year-to-year increase of approximately 25 per cent, will not, of course, be continued during the current six months, particularly as general manufacturing activity is likely to decline through July and August by somewhat greater than seasonal proportions. Nevertheless, as has been pointed out on a number of occasions, there is a strong basis for revival in business activity, beginning late this summer and extending at least through the fall.

"Developments in the labor situation have been somewhat more hopeful in the recent past and both business and financial sentiment have responded accordingly. The fact that public opinion has turned definitely against the actions of the CIO has, of course, been entirely responsible for the recent more conservative gestures made by Administration officials and other apologists of the labor movement. Reports have indicated that there is internal dissension in the CIO ranks and it may be some time before that organization fully recovers the prestige lost as a result of its defeat by the independent steel companies.

Seasonal Decline.

"Business activity, although continuing to decline seasonally, is making a comparatively satisfactory showing. Steel production is reflecting the reopening of the mills of the independent companies, and although orders are still running behind shipments, the trade is looking for a decisive upturn in buying late this summer or early in the fall. The recent firmness of steel scrap prices, usually a barometric indicator, is encouraging.

"While demand for cotton textiles is still relatively slow, there has been a moderate pick-up in orders during the past several weeks. Other statistical indexes of business, including power production, freight carloadings, department store sales and building construction, are continuing to hold well above the levels prevailing at this time last year. The recovery of building activity in June, following the unsatisfactory showing of the preceding month, was particularly encouraging."

Chain Store Sales Hold High Level

New York, July 10.—Chain-stores sales in June maintained the high level of recent months, but the advance over last year is moderating considerably, according to the monthly survey issued yesterday by Childs, Jeffries & Thorndike.

Sales for the first 25 chains reporting for last month totaled $256,-740,329, an increase of $26,770,909 or 11.7 per cent. This compares with an average gain over last year of about 15 per cent during the earlier months, and with a gain of 26 per cent in March, which was the peak month of the year.

Ford Motor to Install 61 New Coke Ovens

Dearborn, Mich., July 10.—Ford Motor Co. has awarded a contract to Koppers Co., of Pittsburgh for construction of an additional battery of 61 coke ovens at the Ford Rouge plant, it was announced today at the Ford home offices here.

Cost of the new ovens and accessory equipment will run to $1,750,-000, the announcement said. The Koppers contract totals approximately $1,200,000, and covers construction of the ovens above the foundations, as well as the installation of the accessory equipment.

Scouts Revel In Memories Of Jamboree

Tent City Disappears but Thoughts of 10-day Visit Live On.

By Jack Parker—Troop 5.
Post Special Jamboree Reporter.

The 1937 National Jamboree is history.

It can never be forgotten by those many thousands of boys who participated. The 350 acres of grounds, which had up until yesterday been inhabited by 25,000 Boy Scouts from the four corners of the earth, are now quiet and deserted, with only empty tents standing where once boys gathered in the greatest peace movement ever attempted in this country. There is nothing but the dismantling of tents to be seen at the grounds. No, not just tents, the tents which for 10 glorious days have been "homes" to these boys, are being razed, but also the many works of art, representing hours of hard labor, are being taken down. These include gateways, exhibitions, totem poles and countless other projects.

However, we all realize that "all that goes up must come down," so we watch our guests depart, leaving behind them the memories which always will be with us. The old proverb also applies to the joys and feelings of these boys. Had there not been an eighth Scout law hovering over them, "a Scout is cheerful," they certainly would not have gone about their sad duties displaying such jollity, because it hurt to leave. They were "good Scouts" to the very end.

Many Farewell Speeches.

Just tearing down camps, packing, and leaving was far from all there was to the closing of the Jamboree. Speeches and campfires were on the program. Thursday evening, after the arena display given by Regions XI and XII, the field was occupied by foreign visitors and American boys who plan to attend the World Jamboree in Holland late in July and early in August. There are more than 400 Americans who will participate.

Groups of visitors from foreign nations marched across the field west and east while the crowd cheered. The boys carried their nations' flags. After this show, the entire troup assembled and was addressed by the president of the Boy Scouts of America, Dr. James E. West. His speech was in three main divisions.

First, he addressed the American delegates to the world Jamboree, reminding them they are to represent the United States, stressing they should at all times be on their best behavior and act like real Scouts. "I expect you to do this anyway," he said, "but I wish to remind you of your great responsibility in this Jamboree, and do not wish you to feel that you are representing your city or your town, but that you are representing your Nation, the greatest on the face of the earth."

Dr. West next thanked, on behalf of the Boy Scouts of America, the many foreign Scouts who had accepted the invitation of Mr. Roosevelt to attend the Jamboree, and contribute to its success.

Jamboree Leaders Thanked.

"I wish each and every one of you who is either going to Holland, or to your home, godspeed in your long journeys," he said.

The third part of Dr. West's speech was devoted to thanking the individuals and parties who made, throgh their many efforts, the National Jamboree a possibility. Foremost of these was the honorary chief of the Boy Scouts, President Roosevelt.

Dr. West also thanked Congress for its co-operation in securing the land on which the Jamboree was held.

Countless numbers of medical men received thanks for the work they had done. Dr. West said the medical record of the Jamboree was astounding, as compared with records of modern cities having a population of 25,000. He added proudly that, with more than 25,000 boys encamped for nearly two weeks, there had not been one single fatality. All in all, a truly remarkable record.

It is somewhat difficult to fully realize that the Jamboree is over, but the 1937 First National Jamboree is romantic history for the United States.

3 Tuberculosis Patients Aided By First Lady

68 D. C. Children Now Taking Treatment in Open-Air Camp.

Through the generosity of newspaper readers, a destitute Washington mother who appealed to Mrs. Roosevelt to aid her three tubercular children knows today that they are receiving medical care at the Tuberculosis Association's camp at Bald Eagle Hill.

A total of eight children were sent to the camp yesterday after contributions totaling $791 were received last week, leaving, in the words of an official, "$71 toward another child." The suburban institution has a capacity of 120, but because of scant money, only 68 youngsters are now quartered there.

The local organization has a list of more than 300 children in the incipient stages of tuberculosis who need a summer of sunlight and medical care to head off the disease. Cost is $10 per child per week.

The mother who wrote Mrs. Roosevelt explained she was endeavoring to support seven children on a $60-a-month pension. She said she faced eviction, lacked clothing and was totally unable to give proper care to a 12-year-old daughter and two young sons whom she believed tubercular. After investigation by the association, the three were yesterday sent to the camp for a summer of outdoor life.

The Bald Eagle camp near Blue Plains was opened for the first time last week especially for Capital children in the first stages of tuberculosis and easily curable if given good food and care. The organization asks that persons interested send checks payable to the Washington Tuberculosis Association, 1022 Eleventh street northwest.

Chambersburg, Pa., July 10.—Ralph E. Hawk, 21-year-old farmhand, was sentenced today by Judge Watson R. Hawk said he poured kerosene on them while they slept and touched a match to the bedclothes in an effort to wipe out the whole family to escape marrying Katherine Gelwix, 20, Gelwix's elder daughter, with whom he had been keeping company. Katherine was rescued from the burning building by New Year celebrators.

Nature's Smile, World Demand Buoy Hopes of Wheat Farmer

Biggest Crop In Six Years Is Predicted

Fine Planting Weather Is Followed by Timely Rains.

Rust Spread Prevented by Return of Searing Heat.

By Russell Smith

"Where long the shadows of the wind had rolled Green wheat was yielding to the change assigned."

Thus the poet. And he goes on singing of the assigned changes until the fields look "as if a thousand girls with shining hair" had risen and gone away.

Over the millions of fenceless Western acres these changes have occurred this year with the happy timing which gives Nature her infrequent benevolent aspect. Fine planting weather was followed by dry, nearly everywhere. Just as drought threatened to change Providence's smiling face, proper rains came. Just as rust stretched a black hand toward the hard red grain the great heat came searing back across the prairies.

Now the machines are clanking and whirring across the vast fields from dawn till dark to harvest the biggest American wheat crop in six years and the most profitable in many more years than that.

The magnificent panoramas of the wheat country are beautiful to the farmer. As well as the next, he can find his poetry there. But these distances mean many things other than poetry to him. They mean almost life or death, clothes and food, school and shelter. If nature's timing is wrong, then more than beauty vanishes for him.

Indeed, this year they may mean as much as $1,000,000,000 in highly usable dollars and cents.

Wheat Growers Find Favorable Market.

The farmer requires more than natural benevolence, however. This year the Department of Agriculture predicts a crop of 882,287,000 bushels. But in 1931 there was a crop already almost legandary in the wheat country, more than 930,000,000 bushels. Yet the farmers got out of that tremendous production but $363,727,000. Just about 39 cents a bushel. Economic chance must be fortunate, too. The $1.10 wheat is bringing is pretty important, too. That is why wheat growing is, or has been, gambling.

But this year the wheat grower has won. He can't lose an awful lot, even if the little ball in the giant wheel falls into the red when he has bet on the black.

Impatient at year after year of drought, spaced by years of overabundant moisture and rust, farmers throughout the wheat belt are rushing the harvest. The swelling fields already have given up a great part of the harvest. Long lines of freight cars are carrying the grain to Kansas City and Galveston. Granaries and bins are spilling, thereby answering the appeal of Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace for abundance this year.

The harvest picture in the airy spaces where wheat is king has changed in many respects, however. Strangely, in an era when mass-output dominates most industry increasingly, wheat is going back more and more to wieldy units, farms which one or two or three men can handle.

Partly this is because of the speedy, small, rubber-tire-mounted combine, partly because it has been profitable for a few years past to operate farms with this type machine. Such combines cost one-third or one-fourth what the great combines formerly cost. Where the big ones cut a 16 to 20 foot swath, the smaller machine cuts a 6 to 10 foot swath. They were almost community machines, the old combines.

But they were expensive and troublesome and, like the dinosaur, are being supplanted by a refinement upon their best qualities. There are big farms left, but they are dwindling instead of growing. The result is that hard economics has succeeded, where theory and philosophy failed, in restoring the average-sized farm in the wheat country.

Harvesting Done by Resident Labor.

The second difference in the harvest picture springs from the same source. American agriculture has presented few more picturesque scenes than those of the old harvest days, 10, 15 and 20 years back, when the summer vagrants were borne by freight cars, Pullman rides, automobiles and afoot into the wheat fields for the harvest.

City wanderers, college boys, itinerants of all races poured into the country to work 14 and 15 hours a day gathering, shocking and hauling the wheat. They were a mixed and at times a tough crew. They earned $4 and $5 a day—during the World War as much as $12 or $14—and they worked terrifically for a few weeks, hoarded their money, then were gone. To the wheat country they were as alien as the locust, and their disappearance has caused no more regrets there than would the going of locusts.

Now they are little more than a memory. The combines have wiped them out, for now virtually all the labor needed to harvest the crop is labor resident where it works. If the smaller farms continue profitable, the itinerants certainly will never come back.

Whether these farms can be made permanent payers of dividends is a question the answer to which may be found in Washington. This year's crop beyond doubt is going to be very profitable.

It fits almost exactly the formula for good times:

"A good yield and a high price."

The reasons for this fortunate coincidence this year are not far to seek. Five years of fair to poor yields and of Federal crop control have reduced the carry-over, the normal surplus which is held over from year to year above consumption requirements, is down to an abnormally low point. This carry-over, the real granary of the Nation, must be replenished.

The extent of the decline in this surplus has been from 393,000,000 bushels in 1933 to 150,000,000 in 1936, and the carry-over for 1937, of winter wheat alone, is estimated to be under 1936's, even in the face of the good crop.

Replenishment of this carry-over and its extension to a point far above the average in the past is one of the aims of Secretary Wallace and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. They want it to protect the country, the consumers, from a shortage, if the epic droughts of recent history should continue. They contend it will benefit everyone, even the processors who manufacture grain into varied products.

But the depletion of the domestic surplus is not the sole reason for the great grin that splits the wheat farmer's face from ear to ear at this moment.

Wheat Market Now World-Wide.

Another reason is that the world at large will be begging for wheat, or at least great areas of the world. Everywhere barriers to wheat imports have been going down, as crops elsewhere failed, or were short, or where consumption and demand stepped far ahead of output. In many countries, especially in Europe, which had aimed at self-sufficiency and had built walls around themselves, this dream of growing their own wheat has dimmed. In others, exporting countries, subsidized encouragement of exports has been abandoned, or the subsidies reduced.

In Poland, an exporting country, export subsidies have been discontinuel and all shipping of grain outside the country embargoed. Germany has cut import duties from 93 cents a bushel to 11 cents; Spain from $1.37 to 10 cents; Italy from $1.06 to 25 cents. Sweden has reduced its license tax on imports of wheat from 10 cents to 3½ cents. Belgium has abolished its license tax, and the Irish Free State has wiped out its tariff duty.

Last year the United States sent abroad 19,079,000 bushels of its 626,000,000-bushel production. We even imported 39,669,000 bushels, to fill out the gaps left at various times of the year caused by successive poor seasons.

But in 1929 other countries bought 154,348,000 bushels of American wheat. Thus, we could export what we did nearly ten years ago and still retain more than our entire production last year, for what we need during the year and to replenish the granary of the carry-over.

Wheat is back on an export basis—and back at a time when it can sell abroad at a profit. In contrast to the changes technology has brought to the wheat fields themselves in recent years, the economy of wheat has reverted to the days of freer international trade, the days which have been extended for cotton farmers into a time unsuitable. For cotton exports still amount to about two-fifths of the crop.

Wallace Propeses Ever Normal Granery.

What can be done to make Nature's smile permanent for the wheat farmer? That is a question Secretary Wallace believes can be answered, at least partially, with his ever normal granary plan.

Its primary aim is stability—stability of price, of income and of prosperity. Briefly, under the granary plan farmers would be offered annually a commodity loan which would, in effect, put a "floor" under the price of wheat. If wheat went below this price they could obtain these loans and turn the wheat over to the Government, by storing it themselves or at designated terminals, as security. If wheat remained above this level, they could sell at a price which would yield a satisfactory return.

Since wheat prices go down in years of large production, in good years the Government would build up a surplus, a carry-over granary which would guarantee consumers an adequate source of supply at reasonable prices.

This commodity loan plan would be coupled with crop insurance. In return for stabilization of the country's food supply, the farmer would be guaranteed not only a good price in years of large crops, but a safe income in years when his crop failed. In return for a guaranty against complete or large loss on his crop, he would pay premiums to the Government either in wheat or in cash. Thereby, the Government would further build up its surplus.

But the final insurance of stability is the key to the whole program. This is insurance of the Government itself against such losses as were incurred in the Federal Farm Board experiment in the Hoover Administration, when Uncle Sam bought and bought and bought, only to find that the huge surplus crushed the market, no one benefited permanently, and the Government ultimately took a heavy loss.

Most authorities agree the only way in which running of such a disastrous course can be averted is through some form of Federal control of production. This control means, as the old agricultural adjustment programs demonstrated, a Federal finger on virtually every individual farm pie in the country.

Several bills are pending now in Senate and House of Representatives to achieve this program, including crop control. The so-called American Farm Bureau Federation bill would allot each farmer an acreage quota and penalize him for exceeding that quota in planting. But such control has been shown to be unreliable, in some respects, since yield per acre may vary so widely as to defeat the purpose of control, or to interfere materially with it.

This bill has been introduced in the House by Representative John W. Flannagan, jr., of Virginia, and, with minor changes, by Senators James P. Pope, of Idaho, and George McGill, of Kansas, in the Senate. The Pope-McGill bill would require referenda to be held before crop control could be imposed. Control would follow if two-thirds of the farmers voting approved.

Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas, the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, however, is now engaged in drafting a bill, the form of which will affect decisively the legislation which is enacted at this session of Congress, if, indeed, it is possible to obtain any at all.

A SILVER CLOUD of hope hovers over the wheat lands of the United States as the best crop since 1930 is harvested. As prices in the wheat marts rise, farmers anticipate a banner year.

THE binder cuts a golden path through the prosperous fields. The bundles are gathered and hauled to the threshing machine, where grain is separated from straw, and the day ends with workers dreaming peacefully of a good crop at last.

This is an "Informed Source" speaking.

You have heard of me many times, but no one has ever seen me.

I also am known as a "Reliable Quarter" and a "High Authority," but my other aliases are infinite.

My scope of comment also is infinite, as is my intimate knowledge of the inside story of Government. When I speak, it is on matters of public moment. I have nothing to do with the trivial.

I conform to no one human mold, possess no flesh, bone or sinew, but I mask the personalities of many who do, and who use my complete anonymity as a mouthpiece.

I have uttered circumspectly the confidential information of Senators, of Representatives, of high Government officials, yes, even of judges. I have even been known to speak for the President, or one of his secretaries. On these rare occasions, I sometimes use another alias. At such times, I prefer to be called, "A Source Close to the White House."

But I have been only an infrequent visitor at the White House since the death of my only serious competitor, "The White House Spokesman." He passed with a former Administration, and I now have nearly a complete monopoly in my field.

I dog the steps of gentlemen who have just left the President, and the words I speak may assume the shape of theirs. Their words and my manifold names go to make up my ephemeral identity.

What I have to say may be read almost any morning in the newspapers. I am a friend to press correspondents and why should I NOT be? They have given me my only existence and substance.

Perhaps they have picked up an important piece of information. Perhaps they have gleaned it in confidence, with the injunction: "Do not quote me." I can take care of a situation like that, and so they come to me. And the words they have gleaned, I utter in their columns.

The informant is protected, the writer gets a story, and I get one of my names in the papers.

Yesterday upon the stair
I saw a man who wasn't there.
He wasn't there again today;
I hope to God he'll go away.

The mysterious gentleman on the stair bobbed up in the Senate again last week, but nobody admitted really seeing him.

Kentucky's heavy-maned Logan glibly recited the quatrain. He said Senator Wheeler, of Montana, actually had seen the gentleman, or he wouldn't say the mean things he keeps saying about the court bill.

Wheeler denied flatly ever seeing the man, but he was willing to swear that Logan had seen him.

"He is the one who is seeing the man on the stair when there is no man there, and a lot of other people are seeing the same spooks," said Wheeler.

The bogey that keeps turning up in the Senate is the apparition of an approaching Democratic Party split over the court bill.

And no spiritualistic seance was needed last week to make the ghost perfectly apparent to all who sat in the Senate galleries to see party wounds deepen, and the ghost take on flesh and blood.

But Postmaster General James A. Farley, optimistic chairman of the Democratic National Committee, doesn't believe in ghosts. He insists there really is no man upon the stair, and if there is, he will go away.

"I have heard that sort of talk ever since I was a boy, and the rift has never eventuated, nor will it come to pass this time," Farley told an audience up at Old Orchard, Me., the other day.

As a matter of fact, he said, he has a close personal friendship with most of those now taking violent issue with the Administration, has worked with them in past campaigns, and "anticipates working with them again next year, and likewise in 1940.

Then the never-ruffled Mr. Farley explained it all away tolerantly, and as follows:

"Party loyalty is a spirit with many interpretations. I don't suppose there ever has been a President in the White House whose every policy commanded the support of every member of his party in Congress. Nor need too much attention be paid to the heated language used in debate when these differences occur. Strong men are prone to become emphatic in their language at such times and to wonder afterward why they permitted themselves to show so much feeling."

He might have added, but didn't:

"Come back. All is forgiven.—Pa."

It was Lord Macaulay who said "that an acre in Middlesex is better than a principality in Utopia."

But it is Representative Charles J. Colden, of California, who has proposed a plan "to end poverty in America and to achieve the Utopian dream."

The bill is H. R. 7005, and it is a plan to inaugurate a permanent Government policy of cooperative enterprises and subsistence homesteads to rehabilitate the unemployed.

At $5,000 per, he has figured out it would take $14,000,000,000 to aid each of the 2,800,000 tenant farmers, and "probably an equal number of men and women in the cities would cheerfully return to the farm if they were afforded an opportunity of ownership."

After buying the homes, he wants to equip them. The cost might come a little high, so he thinks the States, cities, counties and even private industry ought to pitch in and help.

Utopia?

Says Colden, who also is an optimist:

"Let us solve this Sphinx of the ages."

Partition Plan Failure Seen In Palestine

England's Proposal Has Not Eased Jewish-Arab Tension.

Both Factions Contend Britain Is Violating Its Pledges.

By Liam Lenihan.

England's proposal to divide Palestine into three parts has not lessened the tension between Arabs and Jews that for the past 17 years has flared spasmodically into violence.

To Arabs, the royal commission's plan, already approved by the British government, is a betrayal of a pledge given them during the World War; to Jews, it is the antithesis of the late Lord Balfour's 1917 promise to provide a "national home for the Jewish people" in the Holy Land.

But Britain is anxious to wash her hands of a troublesome issue. Partition is a way out. She tried that in Ireland in 1920, when she carved out six predominantly Protestant and Unionist counties in the north from a predominantly Catholic and Nationalist south. Yet partition is a living issue in Ireland today. It undoubtedly will lead to trouble if not bloodshed in the future. So, too, with Palestine.

The partition proposed by the British royal commission, which has been studying the ticklish Palestinian question since last year's Arab-Jewish riots, would set up two independent nations—one for the Jews, mostly in the plains along the coast; another for the Arabs, in the arid hills, with a buffer state in between under British mandate. The British-controlled neutral corridor would include Jerusalem, Bethlehem and Nazareth, cities made famous in Biblical legend.

Only Hope of Peace Rests in Partitioning.

"There is no common ground between Arabs and Jews and cannot be," the report of the commission, headed by Lord Peel, declared. "The disease is so deep-rooted that in the commissioner's firm conviction the only hope of a cure lies in a surgical operation."

How deep-rooted is that "disease?" Historically, the roots run back into the beginnings of the Christian era Two thousand years before that the tribes of Israel had drifted down from the far-flung steppes of the north across the Arabian Desert to the shores of the Levant Sea. In time they prospered and grew until the death of King Solomon. Then wars swept their land; Assyrians and Persians ruled in turn; finally, in 63 B. C., Palestine fell before Pompey.

But the greatest blow struck by the Romans to Jewish sovereignty was in 70 A. D. In that year the Roman general, Titus, angered by repeated Jewish insurrections, destroyed the last vestige of a Jewish state by sacking Jerusalem and ploughing up its site. Thousands were slain; thousands more were enslaved; the Jew became a wanderer on the face of the earth.

During the next 500 years of Roman and Byzantine rule only a few thousand Jews remained in the Holy Land. Then the Arabs filtered in and with the Islamic conquest of Jerusalem in 637 A. D., Palestine became a predominantly Arab and Moslem state.

Islam Rule Restored By Famed Saladin.

For a time Islam fortunes were at the ebb-and-flow stage during the fantastic Christian crusades. Then the famed Saladin restored Islam rule; soon Palestine fell before the Ottomans.

But if Palestine ceased being a problem under the Turks, fresh trouble was brewing for exiled Jews around the globe. In some countries

Typical U. S. Family Sets $30 a Week as "Decent" Living Standard

$1,950 a Year Needed For Comfort Standard

Almost Two-Thirds of Country Now Living Below That Standard; Even in 1929 Average Income Was Below Minimum Set by Voters.

Background

President Roosevelt said in his second inaugural that the welfare of the "lower-third" of the American Nation is to be the immediate concern of his second administration. Government statisticians estimate that at least a third of the Nation is "ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-nourished." How much income does a typical family need? Today's Institute poll shows how much money the people themselves think necessary (1) to live with minimum decency, and (2) to live with health and comfort.

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, July 10.—At a recent press conference President Roosevelt revealed that he plans to go on the air shortly to discuss the problem of raising the income of poorer families in the United States.

Often since his re-election the President has spoken of that "one-third of a Nation, ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-nourished" for lack of adequate income, and his forthcoming radio talk will show what remedies the President has in mind.

But what should the "American standard" be? Few of the people who are studying the problem agree exactly. The Government considers that a typical family in most sections of the United States needs at least $1,250 a year for "bare subsistence." On the other hand, New Deal planners believe America should set an objective of $2,400 or $2,500 a year for a family of four. William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, meanwhile, has named a goal of $3,600 for the workingman.

Today, as the result of a Nation-wide survey, the American Institute of Public Opinion has learned what the people themselves believe the United States standard of living needs to be. The results disclose:

1. That actually far more than one-third of the country is living at levels below what public opinion deems necessary for living "decently."

2. That almost two-thirds of the country are living at standards below what the voters think is necessary for "health and comfort."

The actual figures for family income in the United States today depend upon existing surveys, notably one being conducted for the Department of Labor under the direction of Dr. Isador Lubin. The opinions on what family income should be—of course—come from today's Institute poll. Together with the Lubin survey, the poll contributes a picture of a fundamental problem that was never available before.

Voters Eager to Express Themselves to Interviewers

The Institute's investigations were conducted through its staff of more than 500 special interviewers, who cover every State in the Union. In each State a pre-established number of ballots go to farmers and city dwellers, to representatives of the lower, middle and upper income groups, to skilled and unskilled workers, to professional people and so on.

The vote reflects the attitudes of a typical cross-section of the population.

Institute investigators found the voters in all groups eager to answer the questions. The first question asked:

"What is the smallest weekly amount a family of four must have to live decently in this locality?"

No sums were suggested. Voters wrote in whatever figures they wished. The average (median) sum among thousands of such opinions was $30. In other words, exactly as many persons indicated sums above $30 as named sums of less.

This means that public opinion considers that the minimum annual income compatible with a "decency" standard is approximately $1,560.

Even in the peak year 1929, millions of Americans were living below the standard which public opinion sets today for decency. According to the Brookings Institution, nearly 6,000,000 families had less than $1,000 in 1929; and 12,000,000 families (or more than 42 per cent) had less than $1,500.

Professional workers, business men and skilled laborers name a higher figure needed for decency than other groups. Farmers, who frequently enjoy a non-cash income in farm produce and other things, name a lower figure. Similarly, city dwellers name a higher amount than small-town dwellers or rural dwellers.

Typical persons living in the "ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-nourished" lower-third give $23 as the weekly sum needed, or approximately $1,200 a year.

Here are median amounts named by important population groups throughout the United States:

IN THE OPINION OF	MEDIAN WEEKLY AMOUNT FOR DECENCY	SAME ON YEARLY BASIS
Professional and white-collar workers	$35	$1,820
Merchants and businessmen	$35	$1,820
Skilled laborers	$35	$1,820
Farmers	$25	$1,300
"Lower third"	$23	$1,196
U. S. Average (median)	$30	$1,560

Second Institute Question Sets 'Health and Comfort' Scales

The second question in the Institute's income survey asked:

"How much income a year do you think the average family of four needs for health and comfort?"

Observers may see in these cold figures the explanation of a great deal of the present discontent with "the system" and the willingness to follow new leaders and new experiments.

President Roosevelt says that he will shortly go to the people with a plan for spreading income and "human comforts" to a wider group of Americans than now shares such things. Today's poll indicates that the people may be ready and eager to listen to his plan.

One-Third of Weekly Income Goes for Purchase of Food

By Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, July 10.—If a family of four has a weekly income of $30—the "decency" standard established in today's Institute poll—what does the money go for?

The largest part goes for food. The typical family spends about 33 cents out of every dollar for nourishment, and a $30 income allows just about $10 a week for feeding four persons.

The next largest amount goes for the home, including rent, light, heating and furniture. The family with $30 a week has about $9 a week to spend on its home.

This leaves 10 or 12 cents out of every dollar for clothing and 10 or 12 cents more for transportation. When these slices have been taken out a family with a $30 income has between $4.50 and $6 left for everything else: for medicine and doctor, for books and education, for entertainment and insurance and savings.

If a family has $38 a week it earns about what public opinion considers necessary for a "health and comfort" standard.

This standard allows about $12 for food, and proportionately more for the home, clothing, transportation and so forth.

Regional differences in income and differences in the price of food cause wide fluctuations in these standards. A contemporary survey by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor points out, however, that "in some cities a third of the employed workers' families do not have enough money to buy the foods that are necessary for a minimum adequate diet."

Britain's Palestine Partition Plan Doomed to Fail

Proposal Has Not Eased Jew-Arab Tension in Holy Land.

Both Factions Accuse England of Violating Its Pledges.

they were persecuted and driven from their ghettos. In despair, they set their faces toward the Holy Land. Thus the Zionist movement was born.

In 1897, a Viennese playwright and journalist, Theodor Herzl, called a convention of world Jewry in Switzerland. The Zionist organization was founded; its objects: To obtain for the Jewish people "a home in Palestine secured by public law."

Eleven years later, in 1908, the first Zionist colony was established in the Holy Land; by 1914 there were five Zionist colonies, in addition to 38 Jewish colonies founded under other auspices.

Then came the World War. Fearful lest the Turks use Syria and Palestine as a convenient base to attack the vital Suez Canal, Britain dickered with the Arab leaders, promised them independence in return for their support.

Suez Attack Blocked By Colorful Lawrence.

Reacting favorably, the Arab leaders decided to turn against the Turks after Britain's high commissioner in Egypt, Sir Henry McMahon, planned a division of the Arab country, including Palestine, into independent and semi-independent states. Then came the successful expedition of the colorful T. E. Lawrence; the attack on the Suez was blocked.

Britain's obligation to the Arabs was thus no less real than the later promise made the Jews. That was in November, 1917. Allied advances in the Near East brought demands from Jews for assurances regarding British policy in the Holy Land. The demands led to the famed Balfour Declaration.

In a letter to Lord Rothschild, Balfour wrote, "His Majesty's government views with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

A month later the allied armies under Allenby swept into Jerusalem, and England found she had two promises to keep.

Complicating the post-war Palestinian issue were two developments: One was a declaration made in Woodrow Wilson's famous 14 points that all nationalities under Turkish rule should have "an absolutely unmolested opportunity of autonomous development." The other a joint declaration made by the British and French governments in 1919 guaranteeing free governments to Syria and Mesopotamia.

The Arabs stoutly maintained that Palestine should be theirs by virtue of these points, as well as under the earlier McMahon document. The British, however, countered by stating that Palestine was not a part of Syria and therefore not subject to the Franco-British pact. They added that the Arabs had misinterpreted the dividing line the McMahon document drew between independent and semi-independent states.

To clear up the situation, the Versailles treaty authors put Palestine under a mandate and ruled Palestine's population should have the right to choose the governing power. Both the Arabs and the Jews chose England, and the new government went into effect in 1920.

But if the Jews hailed the mandate as an opening wedge for the "National Jewish State," the Arabs never accepted it. And the sharp influx of Jews irritated them to the point of fanaticism.

Statistically speaking, there were not more than 12,000 Jews in Palestine in 1845. By 1881 that number had increased to 25,000. When England took over Palestine's government in 1920 the country held 600,000 Arabs and roughly 83,000 Jews. Five years later the Arab population was stationary, but the Jews numbered 108,000. The sharp increase forced the British to impose immigration restrictions.

The seeds of discontent had now been sown, however; soon England was to reap the whirlwind.

Post-War History One of Violence.

Thus, Palestine's post-war history was one of violence, bloodshed and steadily increasing friction. Arab and Zionist fought one another and both assailed the British. The mandatory power replied by sending troops; turning Palestine into an armed camp. But tin-helmeted soldiers could not stifle the deep-seated religious issue.

Mussolini's Ethiopian adventure and the subsequent application of League sanctions brought further headaches for the British in the Holy Land. Angered by the actions of the sanctionist nations, Il Duce wooed the Arabs, fanned the flames of their discontent. And from the Italian station at Bari, anti-British propaganda was broadcast regularly in Arabic and other languages of the Near and Middle East. The Arabs were told to resist the British; to look on Mussolini as a Moslem friend.

Riots, more bloodshed followed, culminating in last year's outbreak which resulted in the appointment of the royal commission to study the tense situation.

Does partition solve the issue? It may temporarily solve it for the British, who now may place responsibility for future trouble upon the two opposing factions. Yet viewed realistically the solution was based on defeatism. The commission frankly accepted the thesis that the present mandate was unworkable; that "impartiality and conciliation" had failed; that an "irrepressible conflict between two national communities" had been born in the attempt made to reconcile Zionist and Arab aspirations, and that the situation "bad as it is now will grow worse."

Palestine, like Gaul, may be divided into three parts, but the dismembered country will continue to haunt the defeatist "surgeon."

The map shows how Palestine will be trisected under the plan revealed last week by the British Royal Commission, which last November began a searching inquiry into the causes of Arab-Jewish bloodshed. Two-thirds of the Holy Land is awarded to the Arabs, a small section retained under British mandate and the rest, by far the most productive parts of the country and including virtually the entire area at present colonized, will be assigned to the Jews.

Low Incomes Cause Of Nation-wide Unrest

Public Has Turned to New Deal to Get "Decent" Standard of Living—Labor "Discontent" Is Traced to Wages Below "Comfort" Level.

Today's Institute poll explains much that has happened in the United States since the depression began. With a large share of the population living at standards they themselves regard as inadequate, there has been an unprecedented amount of experiment in government, unrest in labor relations and shiftings in politics. The following article spotlights a few of the things the poll explains.

By Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, July 10.—What happens in a democracy like the United States when about half of the families are getting less than the income they consider necessary for a "decent" standard of living?

How far does this fact go toward explaining the rush of workers into the C. I. O.? The epidemic of strikes? The militant disposition of labor in general? Its growing class-consciousness?

These become acute social and political questions today as a result of the Institute of Public Opinion's findings on what constitutes—in the mind of John Q. Citizen himself—a decent standard of living.

The poll shows that the public considers $1,560 a year necessary for decently supporting a husband, wife and two children in the United States today, and a supplementary part of the poll shows that the public thinks approximately $1,950 is needed for a standard of "health and comfort."

Government figures indicate that the typical United States family actually has an income of about $1,300, and that millions of families are getting along on less than $1,000.

What happens?

In the United States the result has been a succession of election triumphs for the Democratic Party—the party of the "New Deal"— in 1932, 1934 and 1936. Spurred on by the "mandate" of these victories, the Democrats, under President Roosevelt's leadership, have launched one admistration for the benefit of "The Forgotten Man," and they are now launching another for the benefit of the underprivileged lower-third.

The motivating objective of the second Roosevelt Administration, as the President himself describes it, is more income for the ill-housed, ill-clad and ill-nourished lower-third.

Lower Income Groups Back Roosevelt

Last November the majority of Americans with substantial incomes went for Gov. Landon, but the overwhelming majority of Americans with small incomes or no income at all voted for Roosevelt and the New Deal.

The Institute polls foreshadowed this result fully a year ahead of the event. In poll after poll, the Institute found reliefers approximately six to one for Roosevelt, and other members of the "lower-third," economically speaking, more than four to one for Roosevelt.

So skillful was the President that, at least after the death of Huey Long, no other leader succeeded in winning an important section of the potential "discontent" vote. After the Union Party groups nominated William Lemke at Cleveland last summer, Institute polls reflected a general rousing of third-party sentiment. But ten days later Roosevelt delivered an acceptance speech at Philadelphia that was belligerently leftish in tone, and third-party voters began to trickle back to the President in the Institute polls.

Back in August, 1935, just before Huey Long died, the third-party vote reached its highest point on Institute charts. Even a vigorous "soak-the-rich" tax bill from the White House failed to stop the growth of sentiment for Huey's offer to "share the wealth." Today's poll explains how easily a "share-the-wealth" plan could take root and grow.

Poll Explains Strikes, Labor Unrest, Too

Last year the laboring man's average weekly earnings, as indicated by the figures for 25 leading industries, fell just short of $25 a week. The amount varied with the industry, of course. Automobile workers averaged well above that figure, steel workers slightly above it. But the average weekly earnings of the ordinary breadwinner in industry did not equal his idea of what a family needs for a standard of minimum decency.

Today's Institute poll shows that skilled workmen name $35 a week as the minimum sum necessary. Standards of living that represent "health and comfort" to these Americans are of course higher. The skilled worker's median figure for the latter standard is approximately $40 a week.

Two Measures Aim to Raise U. S. Incomes

By Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, July 10.—President Roosevelt has given little inkling of what kind of a plan he will shortly propose for raising family income at the bottom of the economic pyramid, but at least two bills already have been sent to Congress which aim at the same thing.

One is the farm-tenancy bill, to enable farmers to own the land they rent, and another is the bill to establish Federal minimum wages and maximum hours in industry.

Previous Institute polls show that the American people are in favor of both.

Last December the Institute asked a cross-section of voters throughout the country: "Would you favor Government loans, on a long-time and easy basis, to enable farm tenants to buy the farms they now rent?" Nationally, the vote was more than 4 to 1 "Yes" (83 per cent to 17 per cent).

Farm tenancy has increased decade by decade in the United States, until at the 1930 census about 42 per cent of all American farms were operated by tenants. Government surveys indicate that some of the most depressed income areas in the country are the agricultural communities where tenancy is greatest.

Wages Bill.

Public opinion also supports the principles involved in the Black-Connery bill: That the government ought to set the lowest wage employes shall receive, and that the Government should limit the number of hours employes shall work.

Both features won by a vote of approximately 3 to 2 in an Institute poll reported June 6.

If public opinion continues in its present mood the new wage and hour bill will represent merely a first step in a long struggle for a wider distribution of income.

$2,500 a Year.

A specific proposal to raise the typical U. S. income to $2,500 a year is embodied in a new bill by Representative Amlie, of Wisconsin. Amlie's bill adopts a plan drawn by the Agriculture Department's economist, Mordecai Ezekiel, and would require new Federal legislation similar to the AAA to adjust industrial production.

Next Week

Where is the greatest need for an increased standard of living today—in the North, East, South and West? What do the voters in the different sections of the country regard as necessary for a decent living?

The Institute of Public Opinion has been sounding the viewpoint of citizens in all sections of the country and in every State in the Union on this point.

The desired income figures for each section will be reported in the Washington Post next Sunday.

• • • •

Southern Negroes.

A special tabulation will be made of the opinions of Southern negroes. These persons probably have among the lowest actual incomes of all. The Government estimates that millions of them average between $250 and $500 a year.

In contrast to the "decency" and "comfort" standards of these voters, the Institute will present the opinions of a special high-salary group earning $15,000 a year or more.

Nippon Becomes Camera-Minded

Tokyo (AP).—Japan, the country where foreigners fear to take photographs because of the danger of being accused as spies, has become camera crazy.

Geisha girls even take cameras to parties, and instead of singing or dancing in the traditional Japanese way, take pictures of their guests and give them the prints when they return for another visit.

Poet Uses Ruse To Fool Censor

Sofia, Bulgaria (AP).—A young poet named Nicholas Laidis was sentenced to a year's imprisonment on an island in the Aegean Sea for attacking the rigid censorship of Greece in a way that got past the censor.

The poet, who habitually signs himself "Pole Nord," was a regular contributor to the Athens daily newspaper Vradini. The piece that got him into trouble appeared on its face to be colorless verse. But an official happened to read downward on the page instead of in the usual fashion and discovered that the first letters of each line of the poem, if grouped together, spelled out the Greek equivalent of "Long Live the Republic."

The News of the Week Passes in Brief Review

Sixty-three planes are ready to be catapulted off the carrier Lexington (shown left), in a last effort to comb the South Seas—seas which hold the key to the fate of Amelia Earhart, American aviatrix, and her companion who had hoped to circle the globe.

Lonely Howland Island (right), island dot in island dotted waters, was Miss Earhart's objective when she took off from New Guinea in the South Pacific more than ten days ago. In the background may be seen the Coast Guard Cutter Itasca, which took a leading part in the fruitless search.

Court

Great Debate Opens

One of the greatest constitutional debates in American history opened in the United States Senate last week, as the compromise court bill came up for action.

Five months after Franklin Roosevelt flashed on a startled Congress his original proposal for a six-judge enlargement of the Supreme Court, the bill arrived on the Senate floor, and the Administration forces began a strong offensive to secure its passage this summer.

The compromise bill (providing for an increase of one justice every year for each member of the Court over 75) was introduced in the Senate Tuesday by Majority Leader Robinson, who announced that it would be kept before the Senate until passed or defeated. July 6 may become one of the longest "legislative days" in the history of the Senate, as the day will not end until action on the Court bill has been taken.

Daring the opposition to try a filibuster on the measure, Senator Robinson got out the Senate rule book, and announced his intention of holding the members to the letter of the parliamentary law during the debate. Under a series of rulings laid down by Senator Key Pittman, president pro tempore of the Senate, Senators may not permit interruptions except for a question; no Senator may speak more than twice on the same "legislative day," and no other business may be transacted except by unanimous consent. The wage and hour law, the District bill, the farm measure and other important legislation will therefore be held up until the Court bill is out of the way.

Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Montana liberal, who led the opposition to the original bill, opposed the compromise solution with the same vehemence. In a dramatic, three-hour speech on Friday, Wheeler denounced the Administration's "cheap" campaign to force passage of the bill. Ridiculing the assertion of Senator M. M. Logan, of Kentucky, that Democrats who were elected in the Roosevelt landslide should vote yes out of gratitude, Senator Wheeler cried:

"Those of you who rode in on the coat-tails of the President will ride out on the coat-tails of the President if that is the only reason you are here."

To the charge that the Democrats opposing the bill were trying to "humiliate" the President, Wheeler made an angry denial, saying that as a friend of the Chief Executive, he wished to save him from his own error.

The loyalty issue was played up by all of the New Deal leaders in the debate. They charged that the opponents of the bill were trying to split the Democratic Party and form a new party, composed of Republicans and disgruntled New Dealers. Democrats who signed the majority report of the Judiciary Committee against the bill said repeatedly that they had no personal hostility to the President, but Administration leaders tried to convict them of ingratitude and disloyalty. The opposition's leading motive is to "destroy the President," said Senator Logan.

"Spooks," retorted Senator Wheeler.

Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, called Chief Justice Hughes the leader of "the opposition party to the Roosevelt New Deal." The Chief Justice, "a supremely clever politician," led the Supreme Court in its "retreat" of reversed decisions after the Roosevelt Court plan was announced, the Senator declared.

"The Supreme Court is playing politics, and everybody knows it," he said.

Labor

Roosevelt-Lewis Break?

Have Franklin Roosevelt and John L. Lewis come to the parting of the ways? That provocative question had all Washington guessing last week.

The Capital has heard rumors of a rift between the President and his chief campaign contributor for some time, but the gossip was brought into the open last week by Louis Stark, ace labor reporter of the New York Times.

The C. I. O. leaders, according to Stark, are not unaware of the President's recent veering away from the union cause towards a middle-of-the-road strike policy, and they sarcastically comment that the Administration "has become scared and has turned tail." The C. I. O. chiefs are bitter about the President's apparent desertion of his labor and political friends, and feel that he is now "scuttling militant and progressive labor."

Several developments last week lent color to the story of a possible Roosevelt-Lewis break. Persuaded that the general public, and especially the middle class, was becoming disgusted with C. I. O. strike tactics, the Administration was slowly swinging away from its earlier pro-C. I. O. stand.

The trend, started by the President's famous remark, "A plague on both your houses," continued last week as Secretary of Labor Perkins, who has usually been sympathetic with the C. I. O., denounced the sit-down strike as illegal, undesirable, and "full of hazards" to the progressive, democratic development of trade unionism. And Secretary of Commerce Roper warned that the public is tired of extremists on both sides, will not stand for unnecessary strife, and demands industrial peace.

The President administered a further rebuke to the C. I. O., when he declared that there can be no collective bargaining between the Government and its workers. This was a blow at the infant Lewis union of government workers, formed recently with a nucleus of seven "insurgent" unions who broke away from the A. F. of L.

Employes may join any union they wish, the President said, but they should understand they have no bargaining rights as Congress establishes their scale of wages and hours, and the Government will make no contract with its employes.

Evidently persuaded that the country's patience with the C. I. O. is exhausted, the Administration seems to believe that the time has come to call "halt" on the activities of some of the labor extremists. And a little leaning away from the C. I. O. at this time is sure to help the President's popularity in Congress, where many conservative Democrats have objected violently to what they considered the Administration's pro-C. I. O. stand during the automobile and steel strikes.

Advice to Strikers.

As public opinion swung sharply away from the strikers' side in the steel conflict, Pennsylvania's Governor George H. Earle, great friend of labor, gave the C. I. O. some brotherly advice.

Addressing a union rally in strike-torn Johnstown Sunday, the Governor outlined a three-point victory program for the steel strikers: Stamp out communism in the ranks of labor; avoid violence during strikes; and scrupulously observe contracts after obtaining them. To win, labor must have the support of the general public, he warned the union men.

"You don't need violence," he said, "when you have a man like Franklin D. Roosevelt in the White House, a liberal Congress in Washington, and a Governor like me in Pennsylvania, who respect the workers' rights."

Earle promised the strikers he would try legal means to force the Bethlehem Steel Corporation to submit to an election under the Wagner Act, and on Tuesday the pickets abandoned their posts and laid plans for winning a majority of the 15,000 employes in secret NLRB balloting. The Cambria mills were operating under almost normal conditions and only a few troops remained in Johnstown.

More Steel Mills Open.

Steel production in the Great Lakes area soared to the highest levels since the strike began last week, as additional mills opened with National Guard protection. The C. I. O. lost one of its strongholds in the strike when the three Republic Steel Corporation plants in Cleveland were opened with 1,000 troops guarding the back-to-work march of 3,000 employes, idle for 41 days.

Only two steel plants now remain closed in the entire Great Lakes area—the Youngstown Sheet and Tube plant at Indiana Harbor, and the Youngstown plant in South Chicago. All other mills are speeding operations and steel production is expected to reach 80 per cent of capacity in the seven-state steel area this week.

Green Assails C. I. O.

The C. I. O. has done the labor movement in America more harm than any hostile employers during the last 18 months, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, charged last week. The Lewis union has lost the steel strike, he said, because it never did have a majority of workers in the plants and tried to win a major battle through "minority control."

The A. F. of L., he declared, must now intensify its drive against the threat of repressive legislation because of the C. I. O. alienation of public opinion. "We cannot permit all organized labor to be penalized because of the stupid mistakes of the C. I. O.," he said.

"The violation of agreements, the seizure of public property, violence, riots and uprisings can have no place in the social, economic and industrial life of America. No union of workers who resort to the use of such methods can succeed."

Green appointed 50 new organizers last week to spread the A. F. of L. creed in every section of America and in every industry. Funds for the drive will come from the recent doubling of A. F. of L. assessments.

C. I. O. Moves on Shipping.

The C. I. O. moved into the shipping industry last week and laid plans to bring all of the country's 300,000 maritime workers into its fold. After a conference with representative of 23 existing unions in Washington, Lewis announced the formation of a committee of seven to direct the drive.

Immediate and violent opposition came from Joseph P. Ryan, president of the International Longshoremen's Association. Attacking the selection of Harry Bridges, West Coast radical, as a member of the committee, Ryan said the longshoremen would not allow any such "Communist" to interfere with their activities. And the Maritime Federation of the Pacific voted, 2 to 1, against joining the Lewis organization.

The C. I. O. went ahead with its plans, however, and called a national maritime convention to meet in Chicago September 20.

Ford Inquiry Opens

The National Labor Relations Board opened hearings in Detroit last week on charges that the Ford Motor Co. had violated the Wagner act in fighting the unionization of its employes.

A large number of eyewitnesses to the melee at the Ford gates on May 26, when several union organizers were beaten up, agreed with the testimony of the U. A. W. organizers, Richard Frankensteen and Walter Reuther, who said they were slugged and kicked down a concrete stairway when they tried to distribute handbills at the entrance to the River Rouge plant.

Over the strenuous objection of the Ford counsel, a Detroit photographer called the Ford employes involved in the fight a "bunch of dago hoodlums" and suggested that they were "hired temporarily" to "take care of" the pamphlet distributors.

Violence in Tennessee.

Peace reigned on the steel front last week, but violence flared in another sector—the aluminum industry. One man was killed and 21 wounded in a gun fight between police and strikers as the Aluminum Co. of America reopened its plant at Alcoa, Tenn. The mill had been closed since May 18, when workers, members of an A. F. of L. union, walked out demanding an increase in their hourly wage from 45 to 60 cents an hour.

News in Brief

Around the Nation

Not all tax dodgers are Republicans, contends Representative Hamilton Fish, Republican of New York. Demanding that Congress be "impartial" about its investigation of tax avoidance, Fish asked members of the joint tax committee to scan the returns of such New Dealers as Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Boettiger, James Roosevelt, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Former Ambassador to Turkey Henry Morgenthau, sr., WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins; and C. I. O. chief John L. Lewis.

Fish admitted that he had not seen the returns of the persons he mentioned, but he was told they had used tax loopholes to avoid income levies. When Representative Vinson tried to get him to admit that his "charges" were "pure hearsay," Fish corrected him:

"Pure hearsay from reliable sources."

Fish presented evidence that Mrs. Roosevelt in 1935 delivered ten radio talks, for which she received $1 each, with $3,000 each time paid directly to charity, and not becoming a part of her personal, taxable income. This he called a "smart little scheme" to avoid taxes.

New Labor Bill

Fair labor standards of 40 cents an hour as the national minimum wage and 40 hours as the national work week were written into the Black-Connery bill by the Senate Labor Committee last week, and the bill was then favorably reported to the Senate.

The new measure takes away the discretionary power given the Labor Standards Board in the original bill to fix wages above the minimum. This section was assailed by industrialists and labor leaders alike at the open hearings on the legislation.

Roosevelt on Peace

The United States has a great stake in the promotion of world peace, and we cannot prosper during a war abroad, President Roosevelt declared in a letter to the annual Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Virginia last week.

"A continuation of the existing uncertainties in the international sphere is highly prejudicial to the well-being of the United States," he said. He urged leaders in all walks of life to study means to "avert the disaster" of war, and permit taxpayers' money to be diverted from armaments to "raising the standards of living of the mass of our citizens."

Continuing the theme of United States co-operation with Europe, Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, in a speech at the Institute, said the self-interest of this country makes it imperative that we "play our part and our full part, in grappling with the disease which afflicts mankind before it is too late."

The American people, Welles said, stand ready to help in the rebuilding of international trade, the maintenance of stability in currencies, and the making of agreements by which "this present mad rearmament race may be arrested."

Asks More Saving

The President called on the heads of all government departments last week to save at least 10 per cent of their appropriatinns for the coming year, and estimated that such saving would amount to $400,000,000.

The saving will come about through slowing up of the whole governmental machine, rather than through the dropping of any agencies or bureaus, he said, and he reassured government workers that no employees will be dismissed in the economy move.

AVIATION

Earhart

Seas Hold Her Fate

The lonely, isle-dotted seas south and east of Howland Island last week held the key to the fate of Amelia Earhart and Frederick Noonan, her navigator, lost ten days on the Pacific Ocean, while radio lanes buzzed with recurring reports and the greatest air and sea hunt in history got under way.

Though hope for the rescue alive of the fliers dimmed yesterday, the Navy, lending every facility to the great search, planned a final careful search before giving up.

Already three planes from the battleship Colorado have searched the Phoenix Islands, southeast of Howland Island, for three days without finding a trace. Yesterday they resumed the search, sweeping over Canton Island and its adjacent waters.

Greatest hope for success was pinned on 68 planes being rushed to the area by the carrier Lexington. These will comb the vast expanse of water this week in the virtually clueless search for the plucky aviatrix and her companion, who had hoped to circle the globe.

Flying Boats

Bridge Old and New

Two giant flying boats—one British, one American—tuned up last week on opposite sides of the north Atlantic, then took off almost simultaneously to successfully bridge Old and New continents.

At 2:57 p.m. Monday, the Imperial Airways flying boat Caledonia lifted its bulk from the waters of the River Shannon at Foynes, Ireland. Two hours and fourteen minutes later the Pan-American Clipper III roared up from the placid water of Ganders Lake at Botwood, Newfoundland, its four giant engines humming their 3,200 horsepower.

Passing each other in midocean, both ships reached their objectives on schedule. To Captain Gray, of the Pan-American Clipper, it was just a "nice little joy ride" as he stepped ashore at Foynes to be greeted by President Eamon de Valera.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Palestine

In Partes Tres

Tanks and tin-helmeted British troops patroled the streets of Palestine's cities and towns last week as an aftermath to the tense situation that arose when the English government backed Lord Peel's royal commission plan to end 17 years of Arab-Jewish bloodshed.

The commission's proposal would partition Palestine into Jewish and Arab sovereign states with a neutral corridor between—one for the Jews, mostly in the plains along the coast, the other for the Arabs, in the hills, with England maintaining a mandate over a buffer state in between, including the holy cities of Jerusalem, Bethlehem and Nazareth.

Both Jews and Arabs are resisting partition on the grounds that it violates promises made them by the British. The Arabs point to the McMahon document of 1915 which promised them independence in return for their support, the Jews to the Balfour declaration of 1917, which promised to provide "a national home for the Jewish people."

The pledge given the Arabs was made during the World War when England was fearful of an attack on the Suez Canal. The Holy Land was then under Turkish rule and the Turks were allied with the central powers. But the Arabs, who made up most of the population, were restive.

Aware of the Arab unrest, the British let it be known that if she won the war the Arabian peninsula would be declared independent. Reacting favorably, the Arabs agreed to turn against the Turks after Sir Henry McMahon, then high commissioner in Egypt, hatched a plan for dividing the Arab country, including Palestine into independent and semi-independent states. There followed the expedition of the famous T. E. Lawrence and the attack on the Suez was blocked.

The promise made the Jews was no less real. November, 1917, found the allied armies penetrating Near East terrain. Alarmed, world Jewry demanded assurances regarding British policy in the Holy Land. These demands led to the Balfour declaration. In a letter to Lord Rothchild, Balfour wrote: "His Majesty's government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

A year later the war was over, the allies were victorious and England found she had two divergent promises to keep.

Finally, in an effort to clear up the situation peacefully, the Versailles treaty authors placed Palestine under a mandate. Both Arabs and Jews chose England as the mandatory power and the new government went into effect in 1920.

But the influx of world Jews soon alarmed the Arabs, who began rioting. Thus violence continued almost incessantly in one form or another until last year's bloody outbreak, which resulted in the commission's appointment.

"There is no common ground between the Arabs and Jews and cannot be," the commission's report read. "The disease is so deep-rooted that in the commission's firm belief the only hope of a cure lies in a surgical operation."

The British government further announced that only 8,000 Jews will be permitted to enter the Holy Land between August, 1937, and March, 1938.

Other recommendations of the royal commission are:

1. Temporary continuation of British administration in Haifa, Acre Tiberias—part of the Jewish state.

2. A determination on Britian's part to "sponsor the sanctity" of Holy places in the neutral corridor.

3. Jews and Arabs will be on an equal footing in the neutral zone.

4. The British government will sponsor any requests by the newborn states for admission to the League of Nations.

5. Both Jews and Arabs would negotiate separate treaties with Britain, containing military clauses protecting British interests.

6. Until partition takes place no Jews or Arabs will be permitted to buy land in the proposed state of the other; all immigration will be prohibited.

7. Jewish immigration will be limited to 12,000 a year for the next five years.

8. The Jewish state will pay a subsidy to the Arabs for land and a commision will be appointed to split up the Palestine public debt and decide other financial questions.

Madrid

Launches Big Offensive

After months of attacks and counter attacks, skirmishes and the usual stalemates, republican Spain's defending army at Madrid transformed itself into an offensive force last week and drove forward relentlessly on three fronts.

Supported by bombing air armadas, the armies under Gen. Jose Miaja smashed at Gen. Francisco Franco's rebel lines in a supreme effort to lift the eight-month insurgent siege.

The rebel lines buckled and broke under the attack south of Escorial, while farther south more than 25,000 government troops were hurled against Navalcarnero, key city, main supply base and concentration point for rebel troops on the Madrid front.

Yesterday the government commander issued this stirring appeal to his battling troops:

"Comrades, you have fought four days, and you have proved your worth as always. The offensive so much desired by all has begun.

"Aviators, artillerymen and infantrymen are fighting with the courage of tried veterans. Anti-Fascist Spain expects through you the triumph of our cause.

"Forward without looking back and without any thought except of victory. Honor to fallen heroes!"

Meanwhile, Basque and Asturian counter attacks, together with the threat of the new offensive around Madrid, have halted the rebel drive on Santander.

People: Driven from his homeland, the President of the Basque republic, Jose Antonio Aguirre, declared "our territory has been conquered, but not the spirit of the Basque people."

"It is never conquered," he proclaimed in a statement last week from new headquarters. "We will reconquer it to restore our persecuted language, our violated laws, our abolished liberties."

The diplomatic front: French Ambassador Charles Corbin warned the Non-Intervention Committee on Friday that unless control of Spanish imports continued at sea and was re-established along the Portuguese frontier the French government would be obliged to refuse to be the only country subject to international supervision along its frontier.

And while the next move in the Spanish non-intervention deadlock was being urgently considered in foreign offices throughout Europe, England's foreign secretary, Anthony Eden, was warning the Fascist powers that Britain was determined "to maintain the territorial integrity of Spain." Eden's announcement came shortly after the British government decided not to grant belligerent rights to Francisco Franco.

Irish Elections

A Stalemate Decision

As the last returns trickled in from West Cork on Wednesday the final line-up gave Eamonn de Valera's Fianna Fail 69, the Fine Gael (party of Opposition leader, William T. Cosgrave), 48; Labor, 13; Independents, 3. This left the American-born president without even a majority of one over all other parties.

Once before, the tall, serious-minded president was beholden to the labor group of 7 to carry on his government. That was after the 1932 elections. Irked by such dependency, he held a second general election the following year and came back with a comfortable majority.

Now he finds himself in the same predicament and must take office dependent upon the support of Labor or the Independents. Which must be welcome because he appealed to the electorate on his record and asked the country not to send him back to power without a working majority to put his new Constitution into effect.

Labor strengthened its hand in the election; and Labor is no friend of the De Valera Constitution which limits a free press and abrogates some of women's hard-won rights. Already Labor has declared it will pursue a policy of complete independence.

Far East

Alarms and Debates

Another dangerous Chino-Japanese affray passed from the military to the diplomatic stage last week after officials of both nations agreed that the bloody clash Wednesday of their troops west of Peiping had been "localized."

The clash occurred during the night at Marco Polo Bridge, 10 miles west of Peiping, former Chinese capital. Japanese charged Chinese troops fired on them during troops movements; Chinese declared the Japanese were the aggressors.

Heavy firing continued through Friday. Result: 10 Japanese dead; 22 wounded. The Chinese casualties were said to be many times greater.

Meanwhile, new tension was provoked on the Soviet-Manchukuoan border after a clash between Japanese-Manchukuoan and Russian frontier guards. Both sides accused each other of starting the affray. The clash resulted in an unspecified number of killed and wounded.

Russia's

Spy Thriller Series

Russia's international spy thriller is still in its serial stage.

Last week the Soviet Union's drive against "sabotage" and "wreckers" turned against the Protestant, Catholic and Russian Orthodox Churches.

The newspaper, Pacific Star, published in Siberia, disclosed there had been 131 executions of clergymen-spies who, "concealed behind priests' robes," actively plotted against officials of the state and Communist party.

"The world clergy," another newsorgan declared, "is trying to stretch its paws over the U. S. S. R. It is known there are institutions training preachers to be sent to Russia. Of course under the guise of preachers they are spies and plotters also."

Germany

Churches Fight Back

The Kulturkamph movement for the annihilation of Protestant and Catholic churches in Germany last week continued unabated though houses of worship were thronged to hear denunciations of the Nazi war on religion.

At Dalhem, Prof. Dibelius took up the cudgels of the arrested Rev. Martin Niemoeller and scornfully referred to "the vanity of temporary rulers." The Roman state, he declared, never suppressed religious liberty until it began to fear for the state's authority and the unity of the Roman state.

"Alfred Rosenberg (Nazi cultural leader) proclaims," said the professor, "that the Church of Christ is on the road to political impotance and that it must degenerate and finally disappear. That is untrue. God's word cannot be changed. It has come victorious through 2,000 years and it will preserve its force."

Meanwhile, in Munich, the Catholic Cardinal von Faulhauber was declaring the scales had fallen from Catholic eyes and that the final show-down was fast approaching between Catholicism and the Nazi regime.

"The final struggle is at hand," he told 7,000 Catholics. "The signs are becoming increasingly frequent. We have just been told by a high state offical that the church is the state's chief enemy. We are surprised. We had thought the Communists were national socialism's chief enemies."

Portugal

Dictator in Peril

An attempt to assassinate Dr. Oliveira Salazar, Premier and virtual Fascist dictator of Portugal, was made last week as an outgrowth of iron rule that has stifled all opposition and driven liberalism underground.

The former clerical student turned "strong man" escaped unscathed though nearby houses were shaken by the force of the explosion caused by a bomb which had been placed under the grill of a covered gutter in front of the private chapel where the dictator-premier worships.

The bomb exploded as Salazar alighted from his car. In a few seconds however he walked unhurt out of the smoke though paving blocks were torn up and windows 100 yards away were broken.

Police immediately began a country-wide hunt for the bombers.

Soldiers Stand by as Partition Plan Angers Palestine

More than 12,000 steel-helmeted British troops transformed the Holy Land into an armed camp last week when Lord Peel's Royal Commission announced its plan to split Palestine into three parts.

In an effort to end 17 years of Arab-Jewish bloodshed, the commission recommended the country be partitioned into Arab and Jewish sovereign states with a neutral corridor between under British mandate.

Paper and Guncotton Few of Its Products

Proposed Increase in Production of Pulp From 1,750,000 Tons Annually May Leave U. S. With an Exportable Surplus.

By William V. Nessly.

In a Maine newspaper plant huge presses began rolling and roaring as another edition was brought into being. From within them poured the stream of uniform, neatly folded, many-paged papers that soon would be telling the city the news of the world, as countless other editions had done before. But this was more than just another edition.

A little group of interested officials stood by. They seized the first copies of the paper from the speeding presses and concentrated on examining them. It was not the context, the printed matter, that held their interest. Rather, it was the paper itself, and how it would stand, in giant rolls, the terrific speed with which it must be run through the machinery.

They examined it for its color, its opacity, its finish, its strength, stiffness and ability to take ink as it whirred like lightning across the curved metal forms. Withal, they pronounced it good. They found it good newsprint paper, meeting all the requirements for an easily read, easily folded, proper shaded companion at the breakfast table.

And so a new blessing, or perhaps a new curse, had come to Dixie.

The paper was made from Southern pine—wood taken out of the seemingly inexhaustible forests of the Southland—not from the Northern forests of spruce and hemlock on which the world previously has depended for its news paper. Plain, Southern slash pine, of which there are millions of acres, had found a new use, a use that could mean tremendous expansion of aggregate income for the Cotton Empire.

Paper Only Part of Miracle of Wood.

Actually, however, the production of newsprint paper is just one part, one more revelation in the modern economic miracle that is being unfolded in the South's woodlands. Actually, it is only a competing use for the vast stocks of timber that already are furnishing more than half of all the world's naval stores.

In reality, if newsprint production is to get any considerable portion of all this timber supply it must compete with other forms of use to which the wood already is being put in an amazing commercial development.

Already pulp mills are spreading over the South with increasing rapidity, eating up the clean, white, comparatively heart-free wood at a rate that is arousing Government officials here. Sawmills, veneer mills, cooperage plants and turpentine stills are seeing their territory encroached upon by these new paper factories, with which they must share the products from their tree realm.

A dozen new paper mills are building, four more, at least, are projected, according to information in the hands of Department of Agriculture officials.

A hundred million dollars is being invested in these pulp plants, to turn trees into paper of all kinds, board and wrapping paper of every type, paper cups and containers—kraft paper, they call it, though source of the name is vague.

Fine book paper has been produced from the pulp, and now comes rayon, spun from bleached pine kraft and said to be as strong as the regular commercial type, and produced at far less cost. And the Government laboratory workers say that when you can produce rayon like that it is a very simple matter to make cellophane, "the only difference is that in one case you squirt the viscose solution through a hole and in the other through a crack."

Guncotton Also Another Product of Pine Trees.

Guncotton and cellophane from pine trees!

Little wonder that the lumber men, the pole and piling producers are worried at the expansion of the wood pulp industry through their territory. They foresee their timber going into pulp instead of boards and poles and pilings. They fear the very loss of their livelihood.

The pulp mills now being built will almost double the previous production of the country. Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, both Carolinas, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia all are sharing in the development.

The production of kraft paper has been 1,750,000 tons annually. The consumption has been 2,500,000 tons, leaving some 750,000 tons to be imported. New capacity now actually under construction is put at 1,500,000 tons, twice as much as the previous imports, leaving this country with an exportable surplus.

Timber has become the South's biggest industry, aside from cotton.

As far back as two years ago, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, reporting to Congress on national pulp and paper requirements in relation to forest conservation, pictured other countries from which we get much pulpwood, depleting their forests. World consumption of paper was increasing, and it appeared that pulp timber supplies were going down. Norway, Germany, Austria and other countries "cannot long keep up their present rate of exportation," it was indicated, and the Secretary continued:

Industry has Spread Into Southland.

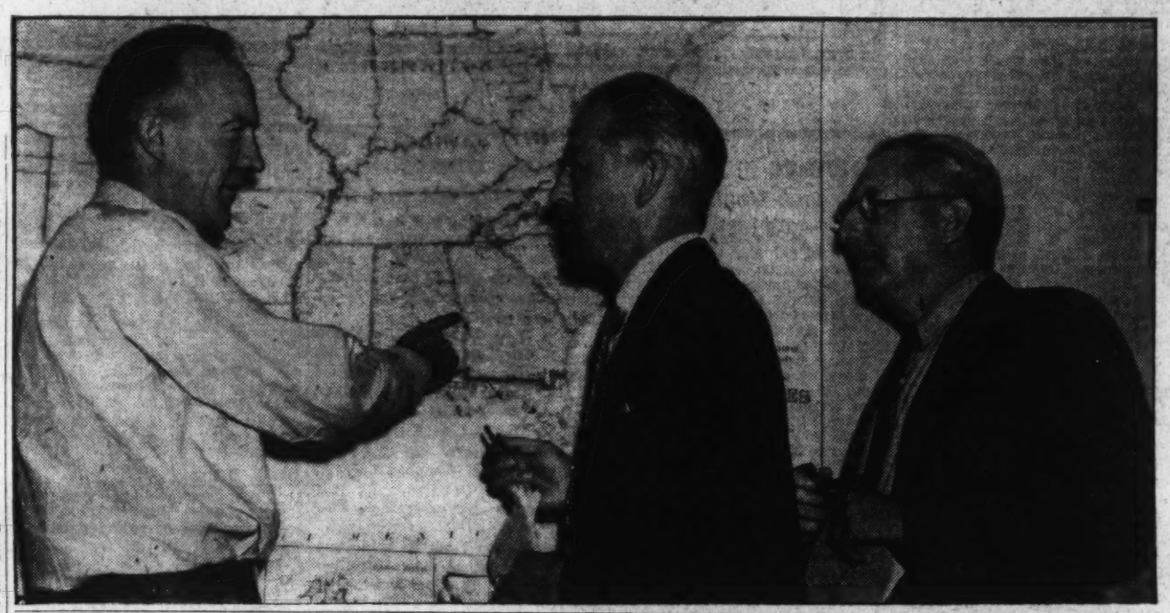
"It is quite possible that unless provision is made for producing and manufacturing the necessary pulp at home, the United States might find itself, in the not-too-distant future, a competitive buyer for inadequate supplies of pulp and paper in advancing world markets."

The Secretary indicated his belief that the Pacific Coast would lead in the advanced development necessary to meet the threatened situation. Instead, the spread of the industry into and through the South has been of astounding proportions.

The South, now that the pine pulp has been found suitable for use in the vast production of paper of various types and textures, appears to have all of the required elements for the industry to prosper.

First requirement is an adequate wood supply. Dixie has 190,000,000 acres of forest land, of which 135,000,000 to 140,000,000 acres is growing or will grow pine. That might well be called an ample supply.

Second is water transportation.



And practically all of the pulp mills are found along the coast or on rivers of sufficient volume to provide good cheap transportation.

Plentiful and cheap labor is another main requisite. As other industries, such as textiles, have found, the South has that.

And the last of the four main requirements is a goodly supply, close at hand of the other materials needed, cheap fuel, sulphur and lime for the chemical pulp. Texas is getting in on the pulp mill development to some extent because cheap oil and gas fuel is available there, in addition to timber, offsetting the disadvantage of the absence of some other supplies.

Special problems have had to be overcome for the production of paper suitable for newspaper use. The laboratories long have produced newsprint paper, but it has never been developed commercially in the Southern area. For one thing, newsprint from the Canadian mills is on the free list and probably will remain so indefinitely. In view of that fact, Southern mills have found the kraft paper production more profitable. They have concentrated on developing domestic production of that type.

Laboratory men concede that they don't know whether all problems of commercial production of newsprint paper in the South have been solved. There is the possibility, they will admit, that the resin of the pines will gum up the rollers of the newsprint machinery, though that is not hampering production of kraft papers.

The technical differences in making pulp from southern pine, on the one hand, and from hemlock or spruce on the other, are not great. For the pine pulp a sulphate process is necessary, and sulphate by itself does not produce a sufficiently white paper for newspapers. What is known as a semi-bleached sulphate process is necessary.

For the spruce and hemlock work, however, sulphite is used instead of the sulphate, the production of a suitable white paper thereby being simpler.

From 75 to 80 per cent of the mixture from which the paper is made is composed of plain ground wood, the balance consisting of the chemical pulp.

Newsprint production would be simple in the South, it is pointed out, if there was availbale a great proportion of young, sapwood (white), heart-free trees, but, adds G. D. Cook, chief of the division of private forestry in the Department of Agriculture:

"God doesn't make trees like that."

Some 75 per cent of a tree in weight is cellulose, the fibers, the remainder is lignin, the cementing material which goes down the river on which a mill may be located and causes stream polution, an important problem in operation of a paper mill.

"Let this phenomenal development be a blessing, not a curse," is Cook's plea.

And to this end officials here are striving constantly to bring about a scientific utilization of the forests so that they may remain a blessing for future generations as well as provide a bountiful income to this.

Woodland Owners Presented Picture.

Contemplating the ruthlessly despoiled forest land of other sections, the ruination through reckless cutting of trees without regard to reforestation, he is holding the picture steadily before the eyes of the Southern woodland owners.

The Nation has heard much, in the past quarter century, of despoiled forests. It was hard to realize in the pioneer days that the forests could ever be used up. The vastness of the timber supply was incomprehensible. Wood was the cheapest thing to be had. There was no need for economy. So it seemed.

The country knows better today. It has been a sad lesson to those who have taken an interest in the natural resources of the country and have attempted to conserve them. The lesson has been learned by an ever-widening proportion of the population. Today there is at least a partial realization of the terrific loss the whole country has suffered through the failure to conserve its natural heritage. Everywhere, to be seen by all, are the ruined forests, cut over with such recklessness that there is no new growth. The land is producing nothing.

Removal of the trees has brought the attendant evils of soil erosion and floods. It is an old story now to those whose knowledge of the resources is casual, but an ever-intriguing one to Cook and his associates, who are driving with determination that the tragedy shall not be repeated in the South.

Conferences have been held with the men making up the pulpwood industry there and scientific rules for cutting the timber in order to assure a steady, perpetual replacement growth have been urged upon them. And considerable progress has been made.

In May such a conference was held at New Orleans and resulted in adoption of a "Statement of Conservation Policy for the Southern Pine Pulpwood Industry." In May and last month regional or group meetings were held at Richmond, Va., Savannah, Ga., and Alexandria, La.

The Forest Service holds the practices adopted there are somewhat better than those in use as a result of an earlier meeting at Mobile, though none of them approach the recommendations made by the service. It has been decided by the industry to give the new practices a trial for six months, after which aonther meeting will be held for the purpose of revision and correlation.

Hopes Practices May Be Improved.

"It is hoped," Cook says, "that this trial period will convince industry that additional forward steps can be taken, resulting in the adoption of still better practices for the industry as a whole.

"We feel that the step taken by the industry is a progressive one and it is our hope that some real conservation in the cutting of pulpwood in the South will result."

The stand taken by the Forest Service is a simple, but appealing one.

"The forests are exactly like money in the bank. The interest on the deposit is available for one to live on. If one lives beyond the interest income he dips into the deposit. The deposit, being less, thereby produces less interest, and so the deposit must be dipped into again and again as the interest steadily decreases. Soon the deposit is all gone and there is no interest, no income whatever.

That is the goal of the Forest Service, the goal toward which it is driving in its relations with the industry. Limitations on the size of trees to be cut, the leaving of a stated number of seed trees per acre, the use for pulpwood whereever possible the tops of trees cut for sawlogs or the sound parts of trees otherwise wasted in logging operations—these are some of the typical cutting practices the service already has adopted. It wants to go much farther, realizing that it must go much farther if the forests are to be saved for perpetual operation. The forests of the South are by no means inexhaustible, Cook points out, despite the fact that 60 per cent of the Southern area is forest land.

Today, it is figured, the forests are growing at about the rate of a quarter of a cord per acre annually. He holds that the growth should be a full cord per acre annually. That would give the pulpwood and lumbering industry working capital, a steady production of interest that could help to retain the forests themselves as the original investment.

Reckless Timber Use To Be Prohibited.

That must not happen throughout the South, is the insistence of the Forest Service. If it does, if the reckless use of the timber lands should continue, then the mills will soon find their supplies exhausted, they will have to close, thousands upon thousands will be thrown out of work, and economic devastation will follow the physical devastation.

Driving along with Cook in his determination to save the forests for wise utilization is C. S. Smith, assistant chief, who seeks, in addition to the proper conservation of timber resources through wise use, the extension of protection against fires.

He has figures covering every State in Dixie showing that only one-third of the forest area has fire protection. Obviously, there is little to be gained from careful and planned use of the forests if uncontrolled fires are to sweep away vast areas exceeding in destruction the amount saved by conservation practices. And so the drive for fire protection goes on, hand in hand, with the campaign for wise utilization.

Progress has been made, Smith reveals. In 1931 only 24 per cent of the land had fire protection, in six years it had increased more than 9 per cent. In 1931 some $927,327 was expended on fire prevention work in the 11 States. In 1936 it was $1,161,471, of which the Federal Government spent $463,840, the states $413,432 and private owners $304,379.

Washington Militia Return Home.

On Thursday last an enthusiastic official welcome was tendered the company of Washington Militia which for some time had been in active service in the Florida campaign against the Seminole Indians. They returned via Baltimore from Tampa on the U. S. Brig "Maryland." Many interesting stories were told by these men about their fights with the Indians. With it all, however, they seem to have enjoyed their experience in the swamp lands of the Seminoles.

Apropos of the refusal of the Postmaster General, Mr. Amos Kendall, to recognize an order of the U. S. Circuit Court of the District of Columbia directing him to pay certain funds found by the Court to be due two mail contractors, a Washington editor has this to say: "We have here the elements of a contest between the Executive and Judicial Departments in which if the Executive triumph there is no longer any law in the land for the protection of the rights of the individual against the wrongs of any executive officer whatever, including all persons holding office at the pleasure of the Executive. Courts would be idle pageants did they not possess power independent of Executive authority to enforce their legal judgements."

Introduction of Electro-Magnetic Machine.

NEW YORK.—Great progress has been made in the application of electricity as a moving power for machinery. A larger appliance than hitherto known is now on exhibition in this city. The public is invited to watch its performance in the matter of turning a lathe. The application of this new principle of motive power is one of the most wonderful inventions of the age. Its inventor, Mr. Cook, will be ranked with Franklyn and Fulton. This new device will supply cheap power for a machine of any size. It is believed that in a very short time electro-magnetism will be used as a power to propel those ships which now use steam.

If they do execute their purpose, even partially, this is a riot and the participants are rioters. Furthermore, any person aiding the rioters by words, signs or jestures, or by wearing any badge expressing sympathy or approbation is likewise a rioter and subject to the same punishment.

First Contingent of D. C. National Guardsmen Plays at War in Virginia

Ready for their training period in camp, members of the District of Columbia National Guard board Army trucks (left) which will take them to either Fort Story or Camp Ritchie. Many an hour will be spent by these men on the pistol range (left) improving their aim.

Taking advantage of any cover he may find, including tall grass, the National Guardsman at the right imitates the moves he would make in the event that there were a war.

By Jay Walz.

Shortly after daybreak yesterday morning a convoy of 50 Army trucks rumbled over Highway Bridge, headed southward through Alexandria—their destination, Fort Story at Cape Henry, which is just above Virginia Beach, Va.

As a good Army maneuver, it moved out of Washington on time and in order. Details of instructions issued a week in advance had been carried out to the letter. In a six-hour period that began just before midnight Friday supplies had been loaded and 400 uniformed men had taken seats in the trucks assigned to them for the movement. They were all aboard, and the trucks headed out of Water street and on to U. S. Route No. 1.

It looked like Army games again, and probably most early morning motorists who met the impressive cavalcade let it go at that.

Of course, this was an Army entruckment as all could see. But it wasn't an ordinary one, and the story about it, and behind it, is one, particularly for ears in the District of Columbia.

Those trucks carried soldiers—not regular Army men, for whom an early morning departure would be just an act of routine, but special troopers, who the day before were behind clerical desks, at hospital operating tables, in machine shops, on delivery trucks—tradesmen, professional men and business men, all.

Become Troops Overnight Bound for Emergency.

Overnight they were soldiers, bound, as it happens for summer camp—but it might be for battle, to suppress a riot, or to meet any emergency, which in the opinion of the President of the United States, their commander-in-chief, challenges the preservation of law and order.

These are modern "minute men" of the National Guard. We've heard much about this division of the Army lately—in States with strike-torn areas, with floods and other disasters the National Guard has been in action. Pictures of men patrolling "emergency" spots have appeared in newspapers and in the newsreels. We see them often and nearly every day—National Guardsmen on duty. Dressed in regulation khaki uniform, they look to us like men out of the Army. We observe, and say, "the Army has taken over."

Actually the National Guard, while it is part of the Army—the Regular Army—has distinctive work to do.

The District has a National Guard, ready to function at a moment's call. It's been ordered out but few times in our history—only at war times—and it hasn't, therefore, made the pictures and the news reels. But in the century-old armory at Sixth and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, more than 1,306 civilian men drill every week, and every summer they take two weeks away from their jobs or vacations to train in camp.

The unit that left Saturday morning, forming the first D. C. N. G. (District of Columbia National Guard) encampment of the season, was the 260th Coast Artillery (anti-aircraft).

900 More Men to Camp a Month.

Other units of the Guard, with a total of 900 men, will establish camp a month from now, August 7, at Camp Ritchie, Cascades, Md. These two encampments will be attended by more than 90 per cent of the local guardsmen. Only those with special permission will miss one two-week period or the other.

These encampments are prescribed as a condition for enlistment in the National Guard. Working for two weeks under military discipline, in regular camp routine and at projects training for warfare is believed to be a good way to get men, accustomed to the life of a twentieth century civilian, toughened to the life of emergency times, and skilled in the performance of emergency deeds.

But the men who rode down to Fort Story yesterday are not just carrying out a duty, Lieut. Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, the assistant adjutant general, D. C. N. G., told us. It's a hobby for some, a vacation for others.

"Consider," said the colonel, "the fact that Fort Story is right on the ocean—it's just north of Virginia Beach, where thousands of vacationers go every year for fun. And Camp Ritchie is 1,600 feet up in the Blue Ridge Mountains, where you need a blanket to sleep under at night. I've even seen the night when a soldier needed two to keep warm."

Camp Is Virtually A Vacation Tour.

Enticing words those, for Washingtonians. And many a local guardsman finds the contingent duties not so irksome when they can be performed in an atmosphere several degrees cooler than that of his home in the Capital.

But the duties are many and arduous, and when the rookie trooper bunks for the night he is tired enough to fall asleep, whether he has no blanket or 20.

Col. Walter W. Byrnes, commanding officer of the Fort Story encampment, showed us the day's calendar for the men down there. The program begins at 5:35 a. m., when the first reveille call is sounded. By 6 o'clock every one must appear for morning assembly. Almost every minute between that time and 11 p. m. is occupied. The morning hours are taken up with physical training and infantry drill (one hour) and artillery drill (two hours and a half).

In the afternoon there is more artillery drill (three hours and a half). Even after evening mess (called at 5:10 p. m.) the day's work is not done. Searchlight drill begins at 7:10 o'clock and continues until another two hours and a half are over. Everybody turns in at 10:45. This routine goes on day after day, except on Sunday.

The Guardsmen, finding it a change from their regular jobs, like it, and none of them think of trying to "ditch" encampment.

Once in a while officers run into difficulties with employers, who don't want to dispense with the services of men in their hire for the duration of the camp. The problem isn't acute in Washington, because so many of the enlisted men are Government employes, whose jobs carry provisions for military leave, just as they do for vacations and sick leave.

Majority of Employers Want to Co-operate.

Lieut. Col. Nevitt said he could count on the fingers of one hand the cases of trouble with private employers. Generally they want to co-operate.

Once, the colonel said, the Guard had a cook, employed by a master who depended on his employe for preparing his meals. The cook wanted to go to camp, and he was badly needed there, because he was to serve as cook there, too. The master was adamant—said he would fire his cook, if he went to camp. The cook insisted upon going to camp. National Guard officers tried to reconcile both parties, but efforts were unsuccessful.

When camp time came, the cook reported at his guard post, and spent his two weeks there.

"And when it was all over," Col. Nevitt recalled last week," the cook went back to his master, who was so glad not to have to worry about his meals anymore, that he told the fellow to return to work."

"Yes, we have cases like that—but not many. We can almost always straighten out difficulties before the men leave."

It's against the law, of course, for an employer to stand in the way of an employe when the call to duty comes, and there can be no penalty for the time he is kept away from his job. In fact, if a guardsman fails to report when the call is sent out he is classed as a deserter.

The local National Guard hasn't much to report about this, though, because it has only had to call out its men during times when the Nation was going to war, or seemed to be going.

On the other hand, National Guardsmen are always taking part in civic events. Only last week 400 of them donned uniforms to help take care of the crowd at the Fourth of July celebration on the Ellipse. They give this kind of assistance many times a year. And then they are always ready to take part in a parade.

Peace-Time Duties Taken Seriously.

Men of the National Guard consider such peace-time duties as an important part of their job, and take them seriously.

They are embarrassed when the public mistakes them for regular Army men. They don't mean to pose as such, while wearing their khaki uniforms. Col. Nevitt said the men of the Guard know they are civilians, and don't want to put on airs just because they have a right to a uniform. At such times, all they want to do is be helpful to the public, keep citizens in a crowd from getting hurt.

At the same time the men want to be well enough drilled and disciplined so that in time of emergency, notably war, they can function with the smoothness of Army regulars.

If there were an emergency the 1,300 National Guardsmen in the District could be mobilized in from 2 to 4 hours. They could be ready to move out of the city in a few hours more.

At the call of the President (the only man who can call the National Guard here to action), the commanding officers sends the call to arms to certain subordinates, who in turn notify men under them. The word is passed along until every private is called. The units are so organized that every man can be quickly reached. His officers can use any form of available communication to reach him.

This procedure is followed in all the States, although outside the District the National Guard stands at the call of the Governor. It is also subject to certain State regulations.

"Organized Militia" of Regular Army.

While the National Guard is organized as part of the Army of the United States, it is, in the States, considered as "organized militia." Most States make every man between certain ages (usually between 18 and 45) a militia man—a man subject to act in defense of his country if the need arises. But only a small part of the potential militia is organized. This organized part is known as the National Guard.

The National Guard is made up entirely of enlisted men. You pass a physical examination, and sign up for a three-year period. During that time you agree to attend weekly drills, for which you are paid at the rate of $1 a drill for privates (the pay for corporals and sergeants in the ranks is somewhat higher). You also agree to spend 15 days each year in camp, and for that you get pay (each day is considered the equivalent of a drill), and all expenses cared for.

The history of the District of Columbia National Guard goes back to 1792 when Congress provided for compulsory enlistment and the performance of military duty in the militia of the District.

However, that act did not provide for carrying the law into execution, and it was 1802 before Congress voted to organize a District of Columbia militia to conform to that existing in Maryland and Virginia. Then in 1803, another act was passed more clearly defining the status, duties and organization of the unit. That law was unchanged for more than 50 years.

According to War Department records the District Militia first saw action in the War of 1812, and turned in a performance reflecting much credit on itself.

Untrained troops served valiantly at the Battle of Bladensburg on August 25, 1814, history reports, and Gen. Smith, D. C. Militia commander, is reported to have said:

"When the order for a retreat from Capitol Hill was received, the troops evinced an anguish beyond the power of language to express."

About this episode an Infantry school study later stated: "The dilatory policy of the Government caused to exist a great shortage of transportation, munitions, rations and supplies of every kind, resulting in delay in assembling and in unnecessary hardship and suffering for the troops."

The story of the Militia was broken off after 1812, and cannot be picked up again until 1836, when the Washington Light Infantry was formed. Records, however, indicate there was an organization through this period, and, incidentally, during that time (in 1826) the old National Hotel that now houses the National Guard—the present Armory—was built.

In 1846 the Washington City Riflemen were organized into a company and, with a Baltimore company, sailed for Mexico to participate in the Mexican War. The local men fought in most of the battles.

20 Companies Paraded at Lincoln Inauguration.

We find that "20 well-drilled companies" paraded during Abraham Lincoln's first inauguration. Shortly afterward the D. C. Militia saw service in the Civil War. About its work there we read the following excerpt from the National Intelligencer for January 19, 1866:

"We would remind the public that the first regiment, the first company and the first soldier ever raised to defend the Union was in the City of Washington, and they were composed almost to a man of natives and old residents, as original rolls will show."

The organized Militia became the National Guard in 1889, when the 1803 law was changed by Congress.

At the outbreak of the Spanish war in 1898 two regiments of the District Guard were ordered into Federal service—that was before the call for volunteers. The regiments went forward, and subsequently only one regiment of volunteers was authorized from here.

The next call to Federal service was on June 19, 1916, when the men were assigned to patrol the Mexican border. Some units remained on duty in Texas and Arizona for nearly a year. Then, in anticipation of war, District National Guard troops were ordered into Federal service March 25, 1917, and on April 1.

World War duty was performed by D. C. National Guard troops with the Twenty-ninth Division, the Forty-first Division, the Forty-second Division and the 157th French Division. The Forty-first Division, according to the record, "was a replacement organization after its arrival in France late in 1917, and because of this many individual officers and enlisted men served most of the divisions which saw service in France late in 1917 and in 1918."

The first District soldier killed in action in the World War was a member of the District of Columbia National Guard.

After the War the Guard was disbanded—in fact it ceased to exist. All troops were returned to civilian status by the War Department.

A complete reorganization followed. Officers, as well as all others, were required to re-enlist, and begin promotions all over again. An infantry regiment was formed, and it became the 121st Engineers. Col. John W. Oehmann is commanding officer of this unit, as he is also the commanding officer for the entire D. C. N. G.

Also organized was a harbor-defense Coast Artillery, which has become the 260th Coast Artillery (anti-aircraft). Then there are special troops units, something new in the National Guard, to meet the requirements of law as to the tactical organization of the Army. These, assigned to the Twenty-ninth Division, are under command of Maj. William T. Roy.

The National guard doesn't, like the Navy, invite its volunteers to see the world. But it does hold out to them opportunities for mental, moral and physical improvement. To every candidate for enlistment is pointed out the slogan: "The Guardsman of Yesterday—the Leader of Today."

National Guard Cites Aims of the Organization.

The D. C. National Guard, in a leaflet describing its organization and aims, says:

"In the National Guard, every man who carries out his military duties, conscientiously, is improved mentally, morally and physically. If he shows capacity he becomes a leader and learns to handle men. He learns the value of organization and system. This is beneficial to him in his employment and civil life."

It also says:

"The country gains a military organization which can be relied upon, at small cost to the taxpayer. The community gains the added value of a citizen who brings into civil life the lessons of organization, systemized work and discipline, acquired by military training. Businessmen recognize the value of employes who have the paramount military qualities of loyalty and discipline."

announcing he is drafting a bill, he said such control is necessary, but did not define how it should be achieved. He said, however, that a larger measure of local control should be exercised "over present and pending legislation," leaving the inference that local committees would be large factors in the control machinery.

This, however, has been largely true of past control programs. The referenda called for in the Pope-McGill bill also have been utilized widely by the AAA previously.

Here is a description by the Department of Agriculture itself of what it hopes to achieve in the way of wheat stability, a description printed especially to be mailed to farmers:

"Even if acreage is kept uniform, growing conditions are variable; the wheat crop will be too large in some years and too small in others.

"It has been suggested that surpluses from bumper crops be carried over into lean years. Reserves of wheat were purchased by the Federal Farm Board a few years ago, but production was not controlled, and growers kept on producing more and more wheat until prices were driven down.

"On the other hand, if the planted acreage were kept low enough each year to prevent surplus production that year, supplies of milling wheat especially might be too small when growing conditions were poor. In the great plains area, where most of the milling wheat is grown, yields vary more than they do in any other part of the United States.

"The ever-normal granary has been suggested as a means of stabilizing supplies. Its essential features are: Building up wheat reserves in good years; keeping the reserves out of trade channels to prevent them from depressing prices; and linking the plan with acreage control so that higher prices will not encourage undue increases in acreage.

"Working with the Federal Government, wheat growers are forming a national policy and program to guard them against crop failure and price collapse. The problem must be attacked from many angles.

"Continuing the present soil-conservation program, perhaps including a wheat base, will help to stabilize acreage. More soil-building practices and more soil-conserving crops will make yields more stable.

"Loans and an ever-normal granary plan would tend to prevent drastic price declines in surplus years; help to protect consumers against shortages, and protect producers against loss of income when crops failed.

"A crop-insurance plan would help to stabilize growers' incomes.

"Possibly more effective supply control would be needed if burdensome surpluses threatened price collapse.

"The Federal Government can help growers to formulate a policy and organize to carry it out. But successful functioning of community and county wheat growers' associations is required to put this program to work on individual farms."

So far as crop insurance is concerned, that phase of the wheat program probably can be taken care of at this session without great difficulty. Senator Pope drafted and obtained passage for such a bill in the Senate with almost no opposition and little delay. This bill is moving forward in the House and probably will be adopted without a great amount of difficulty.

After adoption of such a program, however, whether at this session or next, the legislation faces a judicial gauntlet which it may be unable to run.

The Supreme Court held, in the Hoosac Mills decision which outlawed AAA, that agriculture is essentially a local matter, in which the Federal Government must be chary of interference. It is perhaps in memory of this attitude, as well as from his own feeling in the circumstances, that the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee insists upon strenuous local participation in any general program of agricultural restoration.

A Sound Position.

With drives to extend the organization of Government employes gaining momentum, the President has put forth a well-timed warning that strikes are outlawed and full-fledged collective bargaining impossible between the Government and its employes. Chance remarks and open criticism of the alleged lack of enterprise on the part of existing organizations in the Government service indicate that the President's reminder is needed to restrain some of the more hot-headed or less reflective Government employes.

It should, of course, be obvious that methods of industrial conflict, such as the strike, would be intolerable if employed by a small group to wrest concessions from a sovereign state. It is likewise clear that the Government worker necessarily has the terms and conditions of his employment determined by laws and supporting regulations. Nobody in Government service is an independent agent—all are employes of an impersonal agency representing the people. Within defined limits, of course, a responsible official may have the power to vary those terms at his discretion. But this does not change the nature of the relationship between the Government and its employes.

In response to questions, the President explained very concisely and clearly the reason for restricting the union activities of Federal employes. At the same time he emphasized the fact that valuable work can be done by organized groups in securing hearings for individuals, calling attention to general grievances and presenting petitions to Congress or the proper authorities.

The prompt and enthusiastic indorsement of President Roosevelt's remarks by Jacob Baker, head of the United Federal Workers of America, the new C. I. O. union, is most reassuring. Government workers, as he says, have a right to be heard in the discussion of working conditions and the settlement of any problems that vitally affect them. Even though the range of such discussions is limited by law, Mr. Baker rightly concludes that a "great deal of effective work can be done in benefit of the public service and improvement of the condition of the workers."

A Swap With China.

Somewhat over a year ago the Treasury made an agreement to exchange gold for Chinese silver. The new arrangement, jointly announced by Secretary Morgenthau and H. H. Kung, the Chinese finance minister, will broaden the scope of the earlier agreement under which the Central Bank of China has been permitted to obtain dollar exchange for stabilization purposes.

The United States has agreed to sell to the Chinese Government a "substantial" amount of gold to be taken from the inactive fund established by the Treasury last December for the sterilization of gold imports. In return, the United States will purchase an "additional" amount of silver from China at current world prices, in accordance with the terms of the silver purchase act.

This swapping of gold for silver is a forcible reminder of the curious and unexpected situations that have been created by our empirical monetary policies. Our foolish boosting of silver prices under the silver purchase act forced China to abandon the silver standard. There is an element of poetic justice, therefore, in taking demonetized silver off her hands and helping to stabilize the managed currency that we inadvertently "wished on" the Chinese people. We shall not make a perceptible dent in our huge gold hoards, to be sure, and we shall be adding to the volume of silver certificates issued against overvalued silver holdings. Hence the arrangement does not afford any solution for the vexing monetary problems by which we are confronted.

However, the agreement has a commercial and political importance that cannot be gauged merely by reference to the undisclosed but probably not large sums involved in the gold and silver exchanges. Our trade with China during the present year has expanded rapidly and an agreement which helps to strengthen and stabilize Chinese currency will assist its further expansion. Any plan which makes for steadier international exchanges also helps to place world trade on a more solid foundation.

The political significance of the agreement, as a matter of fact, overshadows its financial importance. It strengthens ties of friendship between our Government and that at Nanking. In helping the Chinese government to improve its facilities for financing trade with the outside world we are also helping it to resist Japanese attempts at political and financial domination.

Mr. Wheeler Sets The Pace.

No one can read Senator Wheeler's address on the "slow motion" court packing bill without realizing the strength of the opposition to that measure. The Senator spoke as a life-long liberal who refuses to be swerved from basic principles because other liberals are willing to risk the dangers of short-cuts. In taking this stand he finds himself fighting shoulder to shoulder with many conservatives. But that fact merely emphasizes the strength of the cause which has brought so many divergent elements into temporary agreement.

Only an issue that reaches down to the roots of American democracy could induce such men as Senators Wheeler, O'Mahoney, Burke, Van Nuys, McCarran and Clark to oppose the Administration. In general they share the hopes and aspirations of the President to improve the lot of the underdog. More fully than the President, they reflect the traditional views of the Democratic Party. Their so-called revolt came only when they were forced to choose between blind submission to party discipline and courageous adherence to the principles of free government.

Senator Wheeler was fully justified in drawing a sharp line of distinction between liberals who stand upon their convictions and so-called liberals whose conduct is influenced by "patronage . . . pap and projects." Unless liberalism is rooted in the fundamental principles of democratic government it is meaningless. It will be a sad day for the United States if the time ever comes when Congress has no leaders who refuse to jump into line at the crack of the party whip.

To the charge that he is helping to wreck the Democratic Party, Mr. Wheeler has flung back the reply that "no party can survive based upon political bigotry." A substantial number of Senators have had the courage to look beyond the immediate advantage of their party to the welfare of the Nation. They have rightly interpreted this bill as a means of changing the decisions of the Supreme Court and thus modifying the Constitution without the consent of the people. With that issue at stake, temporary solidarity within the Democratic Party becomes a relatively minor consideration.

Congress has gone a long way toward granting every wish of the Administration. The delegation of such extensive powers to the President would have been unthinkable in the pre-New Deal era. Yet Congress is not disposed to curtail this vast executive authority. Opponents of the court bill are merely saying, in the language of Senator Wheeler, that "there is a line beyond which no man should pass." A precedent for tampering with the independence of the courts can not be set without grave danger that our constitutional democracy will degenerate into some form of personal rule.

Against these powerful arguments sponsors of the bill raise a cry for "party loyalty," maliciously attack the Supreme Court, indulge in nonsense about senile judges and congested calendars, and tighten up the Senate rules to cut off free debate. An appeal to principle on one side is pitted against political pressure on the other. Most of the original arguments for the measure have been abandoned because of obvious fallacies. Indeed, the first bill has been supplanted by a face-saving proposal which carries the stigma of packing the court without achieving the objectives which the Administration professes to seek.

One of the dominant factors in the defeat of the original bill was the excellent hearings conducted by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Distinguished witnesses greatly strengthened the opposition case. Several members of the committee were turned against the bill and joined in writing a stinging adverse report. If the debate on the floor of the Senate can be kept on the high level to which Senator Wheeler lifted it, other Senators will probably swing to the opposition viewpoint. For in a contest that stirs the conscience of a Nation expediency and politics are no match for sincere adherence to elementary principles.

Stalling Drunken Drivers.

Striking at the vicious combination of gasoline and alcohol, District authorities are devising a new police regulation to prohibit the sale of motor fuel and lubricants to motorists "visibly intoxicated." For some years liquor dealers have been under a similar restraint in their sales—and with worthwhile effects. Why not, it is reasoned, further promote the public weal by discommoding drunks who insist on driving?

The idea is not new. Philadelphia and all of Alleghany County in Pennsylvania have put it into practice with satisfactory results. There is no reason why it should not be equally successful here, particularly with the oil companies behind it. They seem confident they can transmit their enthusiasm for the new rule, in which considerations of good will must play a part, to their sub-agents and other service station operators over whom they have no actual authority.

Just how the penalties for breaking the new regulation will apply has not been definitely decided. Indeed, means of enforcement seem so difficult that an agreement among gas station operators might be the most practical approach. Of course, there must be also some official stamp on the new rule so that operators can persuade intoxicated patrons of their right to deny them services. Accordingly, a regulation will soon be laid before the Commissioners for signature.

The mere announcement of its adoption should be some discouragement for drunken driving; a few months' application ought to be even more effective.

Mr. Roosevelt's Economy Plea.

For a second time the President has appealed to heads of departments and bureau chiefs to save at least 10 per cent of their appropriations, exclusive of fixed charges, during the present fiscal year. By such means he hopes to reduce and possibly eliminate an anticipated deficit of slightly over $400,000,000 (exclusive of debt-retirement charges).

The reiterated request for departmental co-operation in an economy campaign is encouraging evidence that the President is impressed by the importance of retrenchment. However, his present efforts are not likely to be of much effect, because the average Government official is seldom both able and willing to achieve substantial economies of his own initiative. To do so he must either cripple or drop essential services or else tacitly admit that his appropriation is excessive. Moreover, the President's assurances that savings will not be achieved by dismissing or furloughing employes at once severely limits the field within which economies can be effected.

Systematic replanning of the spending program made possible by appropriate legislation provides the only proper basis for an economy drive that will save money without interfering with the orderly and efficient functioning of necessary governmental agencies. A glance at the budget statement and the estimates for the current year shows clearly that sporadic economies brought about by bureaucratic penny-pinching will not make much impression upon the huge volume of current expenditures.

The fiscal year 1936-37 just closed, for instance, with a net deficit (exclusive of provision for debt retirement) amounting to $2,707,000,000. That is a large reduction from the $4,360,000,000 deficit of the preceding year. But if nonrecurrent outlays for the cash bonus are deducted, the difference between the deficits for the two years is not large. Receipts, moreover, rose from $4,115,957,000 in the fiscal year 1936 to $5,293,840,000 in 1937—the highest total since the period when heavy war-time taxes were being collected.

Failure to come within range of a balanced budget under such circumstances is clearly attributable to the maintenance of expenditures at extraordinarily high levels. Even if all-time high estimates for revenue are realized during the current year, estimated expenditures will outstrip income. And this assumes that Congress will not approve further outlays that would increase the budgeted expenditures.

The size of the prospective deficit is not such as to create alarm. Unlike the French who have alienated investment support by a failure to balance their budget, our Treasury is in a position to finance its uncovered needs with surprising ease. If the gold sterilization program does not make too heavy demands, there is a possibility, indeed, that the outstanding debt in the hands of the public may be reduced during the present fiscal year. Even with a deficit to face, the pay-roll taxes will yield a disposable cash surplus in excess of cash expenditures. But it must not be forgotten that while the pay-roll taxes collected from the country's wage earners are available for immediate use, new obligations are being created to build up pension reserve funds.

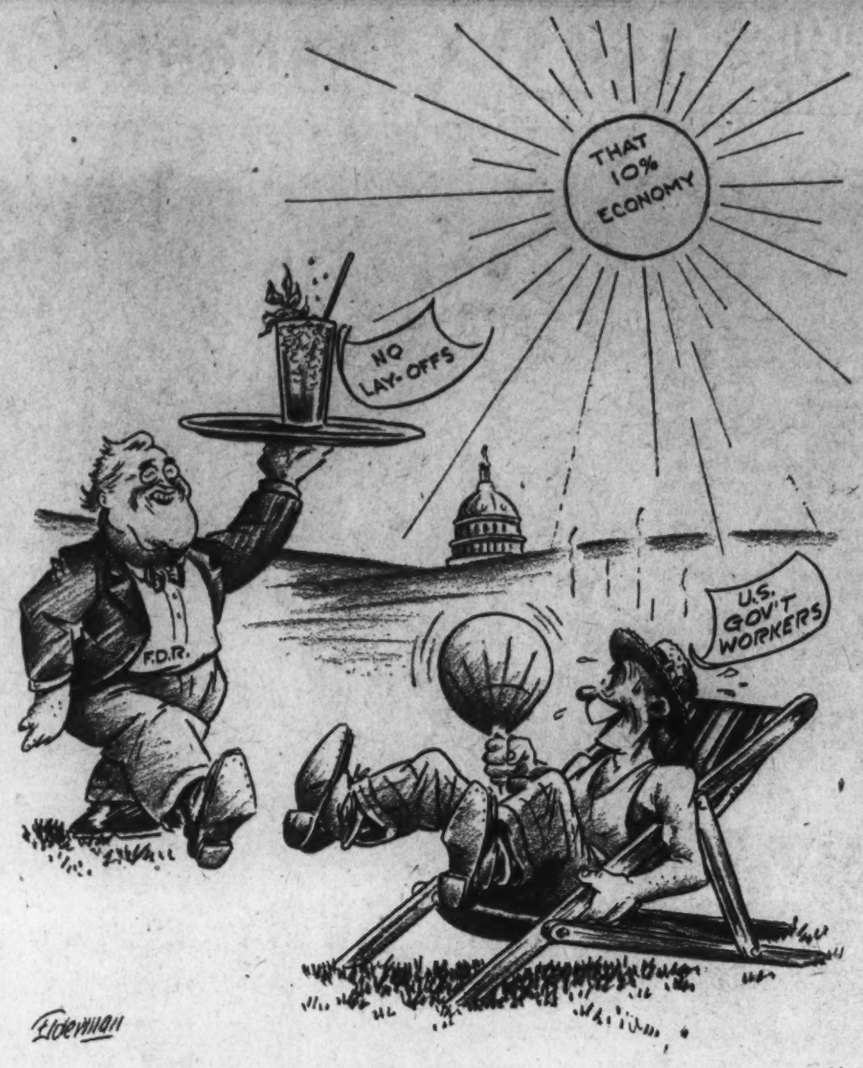
The ability to finance a deficit or even to retire debt in the hands of the public with the aid of the social security taxes should not blind us to the importance of effecting a real budgetary balance by cutting expenditures and relieving the strain upon the taxpayers.

Ideal Ideas.

With the thermometer around 90, this is no time to quibble about styles. To the average person, the very thought of keeping up with the Joneses in this kind of weather is obnoxious. Not so the fashion forecasters who must not only keep up with the Joneses but also be six months ahead.

There is an adage that only Englishmen and mad dogs go out in the noonday sun. To these venturesome souls should be added a third group—designers—who not only run around in the heat of the day but who do so with visions of fur coats in their heads. This may, in part, account for some of the weird fall and winter predictions which invariably appear at this time of the year. The smart magazines are already showing pictures of can-can dancers as buttons on autumn togs, high hats tied under the chin to resist wintry winds, and bracelets of flowers for fall formals which may be kept fresh by water-filled links that do not spill no matter which way milady turns her arm. This is not to belittle the inventors of these gadgets. In fact, such devices only prove what can be done once there is the germ of an idea. With this in mind, might we not suggest that some enterprising manufacturer concoct the following decorative yet thoroughly utilitarian trinkets for use during the rest of the summer: Frigidaire hat bands sold with accompanying refills of ice cubes; charm bracelets on which are suspended tiny oscillating fans, and linen suits which sprinkle and press themselves. With this accomplished, we'll feel more like giving serious consideration to some of their fall and winter thingamabobs.

The producers are a long time getting ready to start filming "Gone With the Wind." Can it be possible that they're reading the book?



Coming Up!

Roadside Aside

If you can imagine Scarlett pulling on a popsicle, then you will have some idea of the scene which greeted my eye as I stumbled over three kittens and bought my ticket to the Roadside Theater. I don't know about her waist. Probably it wasn't the smallest to be found in Montgomery, Prince Georges and Frederick counties. But it was a neat job and would most certainly have impressed the Tarleton twins. A sunbonnet swung over one arm and the sight did something to me. Not that I'm the type who screams for daisies and seeks surcease as a Schiaparelli farmerette in some Petite Trianon. But the barest breath about an old oaken bucket sets me off and a sunbonnet on the horizon is enough to start me sniffing at shorts for a whole season. Thank goodness I didn't find out until much later that she used this decorative bit of headgear as a purely utilitarian vessel in which to carry her cigarettes!

Through the so-called power of the press, I was allowed to sit and perspire for three-quarters of an hour in the ladies' dressing room, where the girls shook off their culottes and climbed into a multiplicity of petticoats, hoops and brocaded thingamabobs. And even that process, so it seems, has been streamlined. Hoop skirts, 1937 style a la Roadside, were not suspended from the waist as in the day of the Georgia O'Haras. Instead, ribbons were crossed, like suspenders, over sunburned shoulders and attached to the skirt front and back in order to take a load off the girls' hips. It was funny seeing these modern young Amazons, broad of shoulder, glowing from swimming, rowing, tennis, bicycling and what have you, quailing when it came to carrying around the load in which their flower-like grandmothers flirted with the greatest of ease.

One of the costumes was blue and white checked gingham, designed especially for the big dairy maid scene. It seems that people had heard of cows long before Elsa Maxwell drew milk in Manhattan.

Barelegged, in shorts and with his shirttail out, peasant fashion, he was painting as solemnly and as intently as a child. Dabbing at the corners, which required all his dexterity, he stuck out his tongue a little every time he put his brush into the paint pail. It was fascinatingly rhythmic—tongue in cheek, brush in paint, brush in paint, tongue in cheek. He was apparently dissatisfied with the color combination which was emerging from his labors. As far as I could tell it was that famous shade of blue which came so near to being royal purple this spring—sired by Mainbocher out of Cande.

"What are you going to do with that screen when it's finished" I asked in my politest stranger-around-these-parts voice.

"If you must know," he replied, in tones cooler than a family sized Frigidaire, "this happens to be the winter palace at Strelsau."

O tempus! O fugit! O fudge! That I should confuse Zenda Castle with a painted papier mache board. I, who pride myself on an imagination which enables me to see a heart of gold in every man who wears a solid white tie. Instantly I was covered with mortification. And paint. Little will the dry cleaners realize when they "spot" my simple summer suit that they are removing traces of the winter palace at Strelsau. Dry cleaners have so little imagination.

I found the kittens hanging out in the costume room, playing with a spool of thread which had fallen under the sewing machine. I had always supposed that cats plus twine was a combination to be found only on calendars. But anything, I discovered, can happen in a costume room where they speak of mustaches by the yard and cut out villains on the bias.

The Roadside's hemmer of hoops and concocter of curls was bent over the machine, pedaling away like a contestant on the last stretch of a bicycle marathon. Her nose was practically under the needle and the only reason it did not get hemstitched was because it was not a hemstitching machine. She looked like one of those things which illustrators of children's books always put on lily pads. But there's no denying her power. Double, double toil and trouble, fire burn and cauldron bubble, and out of it comes glamour and Reconstruction lassies and prisoners of Zenda and Texas steers and even the best costumes in which to be found murdered in a Red Barn

Here, in this tiny room of a roadside theater, hung Capital and Labor side by side, the former a shapeless mass of silks which would take on affluence when donned by Lord Dundreary and the latter represented by a ragged shirt and cape to be worn by Wickens, the lowly gamekeeper. On an adjoining hook hung Romance basted together with ruffles and ribbons. Across the room Old Age, in the form of a shapeless gray wig, waited to lend dignity to its wearer.

Here Wyckoff, who once dreamed of being all men in all trades, might find his dream come true. One minute he could be a farmer of the fields by the simple process of slipping into denims and a wide straw hat. In the twinkling of an eye, plus the brass-buttoned suit in the corner, he could take on the semblance of an admiral of the navy.

And I laughed and laughed when I realized that the only thing that stands between me and being a blonde was a mass of taffy-colored curls with a row of stitching down the side part.

I hissed the villain when he was down and swallowed a gnat. And that, I suppose, is what is known as retribution. Almost before I knew it I was cheering the hero who looked like one of the Smith brothers (the one with the whiskers). Once the villain lurked too lustily and almost fell in the footlights. That's the kind of macabre accident which delights me. It's the sort of a sense of humor which makes you laugh when the other fellow sits down at the piano.

At the second intermission, a dry man-about-town was emitting dust from his nostrils. So I had the exquisite pleasure of watching him stick his aristocratic beak under the pump while Mr. Buddicombe, gentleman's gentleman, pumped. A young lady trailed her chiffon elegance through the grass and shrieked upon learning that a grasshopper was free-wheeling along, like a trailer, on her tiny train. I always say—don't go to Rome unless you expect to use Roman candles.

After the show I stopped in for a snack with some of the cast. It was the first time in my life that I ever ate baloney with a butler on one side and two bailiffs on the other.

Contemporary Entomology

WHEN a sea gull wines and dines off a Mormon cricket, that's news. At least it was in 1848 when the settlers in Utah found these long-horned wingless grasshoppers chewing their cuds on their new spring crops. It looked like a field day, literally, for the crickets until the sea gulls flew over the horizon and gobbled up the pests.

A new plague of Mormon crickets is on hand now for the worst invasion in 89 years. Government entomologists are fighting them by means of a process called "dusting." This means that they will be shot at with sodium arsenite spouted out of dust guns. The crickets lick the poison off their legs and antennae and breathe it into their lungs. The slaughter will continue until at least the first of September.

The lusty cricket cannibals are small but they work havoc fast. It takes 40 to 50 of them to cover a square foot and they travel in bands, varying in size from a city block to a square mile. They look exactly as if the earth itself was creeping slowly at the rate of a mile and a quarter a day.

They have no sense of direction in spite of the fact that for years scientists have tried to figure out why they go this way or that. Some of them think they travel toward the sun; then there's the school that swears on a stack of treatises that they travel with the wind; and still another group of hard-working bug men declare in no uncertain terms that that's a lot of nonsense—they travel against the wind. There's one thing, however, that the investigators have to agree on. The Mormon cricket does travel.

He is covering approximately 4,000 acres in California, 22,000 acres in Colorado, 90,900 acres in Idaho, 102,900 acres in Montana, 98,000 acres in Nevada, 10,300 acres in Oregon, 51,600 acres in Utah, 1,700 acres in Washington and 87,600 acres in Wyoming.

Within the past few weeks, the Department of Agriculture has received S O S's from the Mississippi Valley. The farmers say that the trouble there is the old army worm.

The army worm is a caterpillar about an inch and a half long from his boots to his forage cap. He wears a fancy uniform of broad black stripes. As an individual he doesn't look particularly belligerent, but wait until you see a million of him.

They first came into prominence in 1632 when they chewed up some succulent sprouts in New England. Their next outbreak occured in 1743 when they ravaged the North Atlantic States. From that time on they continually ate what didn't belong to them until during the summer of 1914, they staged the biggest job of their career and got away with million of dollars of crops all through the entire agricultural region east of the Rocky Mountains.

Ditches are now being dug around infested areas and the army worm will meet his Waterloo when he tries to cross the furrow from one field to another.

Poisoned bait trips up the grasshoppers overrunning Colorado at present. They look just like the leggy green specimens that Junior catches in glass jars for biology class, but they operate on a considerably larger scale. The Department of Agriculture, after making a survey last fall, warned the Colorado farmers to expect them in large numbers and the prophecy has come true. Up to now a million dollars has been spent on this insect invasion and another million is needed.

ELIZABETH FORD.

Courageous Living

THE OLD TIMERS, the Parson, Longbow, McGinnis and Smith, waiting for their mail at the corner store, had been discussing a recent funeral in Baltimore; the funeral of a well-loved clergyman, long a sufferer from leukemia. Leukemia, an excess of white corpuscles in the blood and the enlargement of the spleen or lymphatic glands, still puzzles the doctors. They know what is happening but not how to prevent it, though they constantly strive.

The clergyman's case (without mentioning names) has been the main feature in many articles in medical journals and has been the subject of many papers and discussions at gatherings of physicians the country over. This is because his life had been longer than expectation; which may have been due to the many remedies tried, but more likely to his indomitable spirit. There is that in a man can halt death for awhile. Time's fellow reaper may have respect for one who is not afraid.

The good minister knew he could not get well. Death alone could bring him a glad release. But he lived on, faithfully recording his reactions to the remedies applied. If they did him no lasting good, they at least might prove of eventual benefit to humanity. Sometimes the truth can only be learned by experiment and observation. Empiricism has its virtues, and intelligent guesswork is frequently a prelude to logical reasoning. So he lived and suffered and took notes.

And this it was started Casual Smith discoursing.

It is not to death we raise our hats in reverence (said Casual Smith), but to the courage which constantly makes death seem trivial. There is that within a man which rises superior to any system of philosophy that glorifies resignation. Resignation is sometimes another name for quitting. But with Courage on the job. Resignation departs; or as Mr. Goldsmith slangily puts it, "gently slopes away."

• • • •

The Parson raised his eyes in astonishment. "Slang?" he repeated. "Are you quite sure Goldsmith used the word 'in—"

Casual grinned. "I'm quite sure he did not," he admitted.

No word is wholly descriptive (resumed Casual Smith) for the simple reason that there is no material thing and no abstract quality that is immutable. Thus we may also with truth declare that your brother in the cloth was "resigned" to death but refused to "take it lying down." There were things he wanted to see on the way to Charon's ferry. There were things he wished to accomplish for humanity.

Not the desire, which is commoner than you may suppose, but the degree makes the case notable. As a man approaches Death's door he may be pardoned for being a trifle self-centered. He is the one who has to cross that threshold. The thought he gives to others in the circumstances is the measure of a man's greatness.

The old and true saying that self-preservation is the first law of nature applies to the race, not to the individual. That is why men are willing to risk their lives to save the lives of others. That is why mothers so willingly suffer for their children. It is at once sublime selfishness and selflessness.

Somebody (I read it but don't know where) improving (I think) on Milton and Tacitus, said the last infirmity of great minds is a desire to be remembered after death. The English poet and the Roman historian simply stressed the fact that desire for fame spurred a man to endeavor; but there's more to it than that. Deep in his heart a man wants the world to be his debtor. It is an instinctive inward urge of which we are not always aware.

But you may be sure that when a man wishes to be remembered after his death it is always for something worth while: a gift (ever so many museums, art galleries, libraries, hospitals and gymnasiums come under this head), a discovery, an invention, a story, a poem, a picture, or the best 50-cent dinner in town. If that's an infirmity it ought to be encouraged.

These are the enjoyable half-virtues, enjoyable only because they lack completeness. All the perfect virtues are as commonplace as personal cleanliness. Cleanliness may be next to godliness but it is nothing to write songs about.

And the sinner having a good time practicing virtue invariably seeks some lasting quality in his bequest to the world, something that will endure. Thus entirely laudable is the wish of a father to have his son succeed him in business, to keep the house intact and give added prestige to the name.

But far more numerous, and far more praiseworthy, are the unheralded benefactions to the race by rich and poor alike, the examples of righteous living and unsullied character. The devotion to the work in hand, the desire to do a good job, the practice of the homely virtues, with never a thrill in a carload. Every man who painstakingly and conscientiously sticks to his job leaves the world a happy legatee.

And that's why the careful record of one man's ailments seems to me a badge of honor of which his loved ones may well be proud.

U.S. Finds Sympathy For Alien Population

Disdain And Haughtiness Of Former Years Gives Way To Kindlier Attitude Exemplified By Several Benevolent Societies.

By Bernard G. Richards.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

IT never rains but it pours. In the last four or five years a number of committees and organizations have made their appearance having as their object the study and improvement of conditions affecting the life of our naturalized citizens and even alien residents in the United States. It is significant that this revived interest in our new Americans has developed among Americans of old, for the most part native sons and daughters. They it is who make up the various societies which have lately been formed to be friend the alien and to assist in his adaptation to the new environment.

For years and decades the immigrant was forgotten and neglected by the dominant elements in American life. When at all noticed, he was looked at askance by those who were more favorably circumstanced or dwelled in the pride of having been here before. Then, when the strangers at our gates were not met with ill-concealed scorn, they were treated with open contumely. From time to time the pride of priority or the haughtiness of nativism was raised to the height of a conception of life. One anti-alien agitation after another gave rise to a movement, organization or unfraternal order which—with or without hood, costume or regalia—went forth to do battle against hordes of barbaric invaders and to make a travesty of basic American claims of equality and principles of fair play.

But it is the glory of true Americanism that an inherent love of justice and sense of balance always prevails; and so, with the advance of time and ever-better understanding, one anti-alien crusade after another was submerged by higher and more authentic expressions of social duty and humane relations between the various elements of our population.

FURTHER study of the subject revealed the most impressive fact that the overwhelming number of immigrants came to America to be Americans and nothing else; i. e., nothing else politically, even if they retained certain religious, linguistic and cultural affiliations and traditions which in the last analysis, only enhanced and lent color and vigor to their Americanism. A broader and more sympathetic outlook upon all social questions at least gave the immigrants and would-be Americans the benefit of closer and more humane relations with the rest of the population. That erstwhile strange and unknown American seemed to improve upon acquaintance. Observers, students, social workers and others appear to have been drawn more and more into the sphere of this extremely interesting, if not fascinating subject of social and economic adjustment relating to the immigrant.

Thus the theme has given rise to a new periodical and also more lasting literature. Next, one committee after another sprung up to devote itself to the advancement of the immigrant until we have at last attained the establishment of an immigrant welfare foundation which has signalized its advent and symbolized its purpose by singling out for distinction three distinguished Americans of immigrant origin.

On Apr1 22, the National Institute of Immigrant Welfare, of New York City, which is headed by Mr. Leifur Magnusson, held a public meeting at the Biltmore Hotel in order to confer honor upon three distinguished immigrant Americans. They were Mr. Henry Morgenthau, sr., born in Germany, former Ambassador to Turkey; Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, born in Czechoslovakia, famous anthropologist of the United State National Museum at Washington; and Mr. Leo Hendrik Baekeland, born in Belgium and now regarded as one of the most distinguished chemists in the world.

In line with the aims of the National Institute of Immigrant Welfare, a number of other bodies have come into being, some of them preceding the advent of the institute. Altogether we now have, in addition to the Institute, the Foreign Language Information Service, of New York, Mr. Reid Lewis, director; the American Committee for the Protection of Foreign Born, also of New York, the Rev. Herman Reissig, chairman; the National Council of Naturalization Citizenship, Mr. Donald Young, chairman, and the Committee on Immigration Aid at Ellis Island and New York Harbor, Maj. Thomas A. Johnson, chairman.

DEPICTING again, in all its comedy and pathos, the immigrant's ordeal in attempting to adjust himself to a new and bewildering environment, a number of notable essays have lately appeared in leading magazines.

Louis Adamic, whose "The Native's Return" reflected so much of the yearning and nostalgia of the wanderer in quest of bread and a new home, lately took up once more the subject of "Alien and Alienbaiters." His notable article in Harpers Magazine for November last derided various misguided individuals and groups which have made the immigrant the butt of their ridicule and disparagement. He appealed most impressively to the American sense of justice and fellowship for more sympathetic understanding of our naturalized citizens.

There is the same touch of sadness and longing suffused by the spirit of courage and adventure in the fascinating "Memoir of My Mother," by Angelo D. Bertocci, which also appeared in a recent number of Harpers Magazine. While drawing an unforgettable picture of a most devoted, self-reliant and perservering mother, this writer, an assistant professor of French at Bates College, has enriched the literature on the subject with a notable chapter giving the intensive human side of immigration, which has so far escaped the authors of sociological studies and governmental reports.

"Like most men of action," says Dr. Bertocci, "the Italian immigrant has his Golden Age and his Apocalypse. Italy was the Golden Age, more golden as it becomes more remote; his Apocalypse is the return of the native, his own Second Coming. I suppose that even the most wretched Italian fleeing from poverty to a new land needs to create at least a myth of his eventual return, if only to muster courage of departure. And this provisional myth of the return hardens for many into the substance of a faith and generates a Golden Age in the past if only that it may be recaptured in the future."

Equally penetrating and informative is the article called "Americans First" written by Willfam Seabrook for the American Magazine. This study of Italian-Americans and the pervasive role which they played in the development of our "Land of the Free which was discovered by one 'wop' and named after another," is part of a series of articles on the foreign born groups in the United States.

THUS the immigrant has been discovered, or rediscovered, by the "higher journalism" of our time and presumably the new spirit of better fellowship and more thorough understanding will produce other studies, small and large, which are bound to increase our knowledge and if the knowledge is worth anything, enhance our sympathies.

It may be somewhat ironic that we should return to closer observation of and a more friendly feeling to the immigrant 13 years after we have officially taken drastic steps to minimize the opportunities of wanderers seeking our shores.

Among The Magazines

The Nation's fifteen billion dollar crime bill is largely due to abuses of the parole system says J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in an attack on the State system of releasing criminals who then commit fresh crimes. He advocates that every State model its system after that of the Federal Parole Board.

"Abuse of the parole system allows the worst criminals to run loose in contempt of the law they have outwitted," he states in his article "The Menace in Parole" in the current Cosmopolitan. "Put your finger blindly upon the map of the United States and you will be almost certain to touch a section in which defiant criminals, encouraged by lax prison discipline and corrupt or inept parole or pardon systems, have made society pay in blood and death for releasing them."

Supporting his conviction that there should be fewer paroles, Hoover cites the case of one of Alabama's largest cities where the chief of police estimates 60 per cent of his men's time is consumed in running down parole violators and that 85 per cent of the crime in the city is committed by parolees.

To remedy the situation, Hoover suggests freeing paroles from politics and reorganizing State parole systems.

"Every State should gear its system to a national standard which is perhaps best set today by the Federal parole board with its highly trained staff and close supervision of parolees after their selection by careful process," he continues.

"We can never have honest, thorough and impartial justice or law inforcement in America, so long as we have unfairness such as there is today in parole and until our penal system comes from behind its cloud of disgrace.

"You must have heard of one John Dillinger, of Crown Point, Indiana, but have you ever studied the box score of damage done by that paroled rat and his mob, many of whom were also parolees?

Law-enforcement officers killed	8
Law-enforcement officers wounded	6
Private citizens killed	2
Private citizens wounded	1
Banks robbed	4
Arsenals and police headquarters raided	3
Jail deliveries	3
Suicides by gangsters	1
Gangsters killed by officers	8

"You can put your finger blindly upon the map of the United States and be almost certain to touch a section in which defiant criminals, encouraged by lax prison discipline and corrupt or inept parole or pardon systems, have made society pay in blood and death for releasing them."

Virginian Says Neighbors Are Responsible For 'Dying Democracy.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washingtonians and inhabitants of the surrounding territory have made pertinent comments concerning the present struggle between organized labor and the employer, but the opposition to organized labor has been apparently more influenced by prejudice than by reason. This in itself is an indication of the stagnant and reactionary outlook of the so-called "middle class" worker and intellectual of the region, and reflects the smug hypocrisy of a city and territory populated by selfish persons who are continually thinking only of themselves.

The reaction of the citizens to news events shown on the screens of local theaters proves the crass stupidity of the great mass of citizens who live and work here. They invariably applaud the most conservative and antisocial comments and persons—they worship mediocrity and the rule of status quo, and if they have minds of their own—there is no indication of it in their actions, either physical or mental. With few exceptions the population is made up of self-satisfied middle-class beggars, who either received their economic security and jobs by the questionable virtue of a civil service examination or followed the middle-class rut of their parents and friends into a commonplace clerkship or legalized thievery, such as law, real estate, stocks or charity, and in recent years managed to keep alive by accepting work from a feudal politician with jobs to offer for votes. Their favorite poet is Edgar Guest, their favorite author, Margaret Mitchell, and their favorite song may run anywhere between a maudlin ballad about home and fireside to a torch song that would cause a jungle savage to snort in disguest at such childish prattle.

These citizens have never known a depression in the best sense of the word—they might have used syrup instead of sugar during the World War, but they were spared working in sweatshops with other tubercular workers — they were spared strikes and the necessity for organizing for a decent wage because all their lifetime they had known only the degrading labor and culture of a society that was nurtured on snobbishness and middle-class comfort, without the purifying effect of having to look for a job or doing a decent day's labor with the hands as well as with the brain.

The citizens despise the working man in the overalls because he presents to them the symbol of a class that has known hard work and poverty, and worse than this, the man in overalls and the girl in the factory are symbolic of people who have managed to live and achieve success in spite of the dirty deals given them by the people who could not exist without their labor, but who wish to pay as little for it as possible. As Mr. Morley aptly observed in a recent article, these people are joining unions and even becoming radical, not because they were Communists at birth, but because the abuses of that contemptible snobbish society above them forces them to band together to avoid worse treatment than they are now given.

The man or woman who attacks organized labor does so for one of only a few reasons—either because that person lives by cheating others out of their just rewards in a democratic society, or because that person hopes to receive even greater financial or social rewards by attacking persons who seek to improve their condition by organization. Also there are many persons who are, by nature, selfish and brutal, and it is only logical to find these human dregs joining or forming terroristic groups, such as the Black Legion, the Silver Shirts and the Klan, in order to give them a false feeling of superiority and fill their pockets by selling nightgowns to the rubes. It is because of these people that democracy is now dying in America, and decent people must join with organized labor to fight the rising tide of fascism that threatens to make this Nation another Italy or Germany.

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Practically all of the members of the City Fire Fighters' Association read your very accurate and enlightening article of Mr. E. F. Folliard in The Post of July 5 on the District of Columbia Fire Department, and I have heard considerable good comment on the article from many of my associates.

As you no doubt know, the City Fire Fighters' Association is comprised of an overwhelming majority of the rank and file of the District of Columbia fire department, and as such we are vitally interested in the welfare of the fire department. Please accept my thanks as president of the City Fire Fighters' Association for the good publicity given to the fire department in the above-mentioned article.

The Compromise Court Bill.

Omaha World-Herald—Senator Robinson's compromise substitute for the judiciary bill is a misnomer. It is no compromise at all. Under its terms the President would name, within the year, two new Supreme Court justices in addition to a third to fill the vacancy created by Justice Van Devanter's resignation. The assault upon judicial independence remains. The court-packing feature remains. The extension of executive power and influence over a co-ordinate branch of government remains. All these are definitely bad, menacing to the system of free and independent institutions established for the preservation of American liberty.

Richmond Times-Dispatch—The so-called "compromise" bill for the enlargement of the Supreme Court is approximately as objectionable as the original bill. If it is wrong in principle, and from the standpoint of policy, to add six justices, in order to get New Deal legislation past the court, it is also wrong to add any justices for that purpose . . . It may be that the Administration's insistence upon additional justices is due to a desire on its part to secure the validation of legislation which would not be validated by the present court. If so, this newspaper doubts if the legislation in question is desirable. The present court seems to us a court in the tradition of Holmes and Brandeis. We want nothing better than that.

Boston Transcript—No amount of soft speech by Senator Robinson or of bluster and bombast by Senator Guffey can obscure the fact that the issue which caused the Nation to rise against the first Supreme Court bill has in no sense been dissipated by the introduction of a misnamed compromise measure. In both cases the plain purpose of the President is to control the judiciary and to bend it to his will. The best proof of this point is to be found in the fact that the Administration supporters, including Messrs. Robinson and Guffey, have dropped the early pretense that the court is physically incompetent or behind in its work and are now concentrating their attack on the judgments which have been rendered against pet New Deal measures.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch—Introduction in the Senate, with Administration approval, of a substitute for the original Roosevelt court-packing bill is a tacit admission of defeat for that measure. Thus the first great engagement in the fight to prevent executive domination of the Supreme Court has been won. . . . Equally with the first, it is a measure which, in the language of the Senate Judiciary Committee regarding the original bill, "should be so emphatically rejected that its parallel will never again be presented to the free representatives of the free people of America."

Chicago Daily News—The original court-packing bill is dead. The people killed it. They can kill the tricky substitute measure which Senator Robinson has introduced in the Senate. It is no less vicious in principle than that which he and his colleagues were forced by the people to abandon. For the President has not retreated. He has merely shifted formation to make a flank attack. In the new bill he is taking full advantage of the facts that popular sentiment has been lulled into a false sense of security by repulse of his first political assault on the Supreme Court; the the inertia of summer heat and vacation time has fallen upon the people, and that rebellious Senators of his own party are, many of them, eager for an excuse to slip back into the smiling favor of the White House . . . Once again the people are on the defensive. They have won an engagement, but they have not yet won the war.

New Orleans Times-Picayune—The compromise bill, in brief, violates the principle of an independent judiciary equally with the original proposal; it would establish a no less dangerous precedent for possible abuse in future by ambitious and impatient executives whose programs might be judicially condemned as violative of constitutional rights and safeguards. The packing of the Nation's Supreme Court should be resisted and beaten, whether it is proposed by installments or all at once, because the practice, once sanctioned, will open the way to abuses destructive of the American system of constitutional democracy . . . Now we are to see whether a compromise equally vicious in principle and no less dangerous as a precedent can be jockeyed through the Senate on pleas of party "expediency" and loyalty.

Brooklyn Citizen—The substitute bill, in principle, is similar to the original bill. It provides a means of overcoming the usurpation of the legislative functions of the Congress by reactionary justices. The court itself has recognized in recent decisions that it has been subjected to attacks for precisely this reason. The American people are overwhelmingly back of the President in his demand for infusion of new blood and the end of legislative usurpation by the judiciary branch of the Government.

Christian Science Monitor—When the present situation of the court is considered, any necessity for the new measure is hard to discover. The court as constituted last term approved every New Deal measure to come before it. With the retirement of one conservative justice, the liberal majority is strongly buttressed. The country must question what kind of a program is desired if it is one that would not be approved by a court where Chief Justice Hughes and Mr. Justice Roberts would both have to swing to the conservative side to cause rejection. Even more, it must wonder what kind of a program is contemplated if it is one which requires six new justices.

Advice Across The Sea

Fascist Suspected

Reader Suggests Donation To Loyalists Would 'Help Spain.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to voice my suspicions that P. H. Geoghegan in The Post of July 6 gave all signs of being a Fascist who tries to spread his propaganda, thinking that he will be looked upon as a "defender of Christianity." Being a Fascist, he hates democracy and he seems to concentrate his efforts on dragging our American republic into a fierce war. Moreover, he knows nothing about international law and he makes no effort to hide that deplorable fact.

Mr. Geoghegan thinks that the "Little World War" now raging in Spain, and started by the greed of Hitler and Mussolini, will be brought to an end if the U. S. Government and other states would recognize the Fascist rebels. He seems to have forgotten why Great Britain and France refuse to grant belligerent rights to the Spanish rebels who are openly aided by the mercenaries of international fascism. Great Britain and France know that the recognition of the rebels would result in nothing else than the molestation of all merchant shipping, not only around Spain, but in the whole Mediterranean. Would such an interference with international trade not result in general war? Why should the United States run the risk of being drawn into that war just because our government gave its permission to the rebel pirates to attack all ships?

If Mr. Geoghegan had just a little interest in keeping the U. S. out of the war in Spain, he should have suggested something constructive, i. e., our government should put an arms and war materials embargo on German and Italian fascism. It is well-known that the so-called American neutrality law operates with deadly accuracy against the Spanish republic which is defending its very life, but that law allows Hitler and Mussolini to purchase American materials to invade Spain and impose a Fascist military dictatorship on the free people of Spain. A democratic-minded Mr. Geoghehan would have written a letter entitled "blockade Germany and Italy."

As to who are destroying Christianity in Spain, let him keep in mind how the bombers of Hitler and Mussolini reduced to ashes Guernica, the "Holy City" of the devout Catholic Basque people and how priests and nuns were machine-gunned to death in the Basque cities like in Durango.

It is entirely irrelevant to bring up what the Spanish settlers did in California one hundred or more years ago. However, if Mr. Geoghegan feels so grateful, let him pay his debt to the real Spanish people, those who defend their own republic, by sending a contribution to the American Friends of Spanish Democracy (20 Vesey street, New York City), an organization sending surgeons, nurses, and ambulances to loyalist Spain. If he will follow this suggestion, he will do more to help put an end to the war in Spain than by sending 10,000 letters to that many newspapers.

One can easily understand his technique of distorting facts if he keeps in mind that it is a principle with all Fascists to specialize in spreading big lies only, for those will awe people with their grandeur and thus may even be believed, whilst tiny lies can be easily detected. He, however, better quit spreading lies altogether and he especially should cease discussing matters, the understanding of which needs just a little honesty and knowledge.

Tugwelltown.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Senator Byrd in condemning the Resettlement homes at Tugwelltown did not include in the price of the houses the 12,000 acres of land, the miles of roads and streets which gave work to transients from every State in the Union, the two school houses, the stores, firehouse and other buildings.

I admit some mistakes were made in building homes for 5,000 people, but it could not be charged to workmen. But the material which came from all parts of the United States was the best and the houses will stand as long as the world lasts. Not a word was said about the $16,000,000 spent on the new Supreme Court Building to house nine men who used one room for over 100 years, and many think that was good enough for them.

Loyalists Train Boys For Possible War Use

Correspondent Visits Camp On Old Golf Course; Reorganized Basque Regiment Being Formed To Obviate Language Difficulties.

By E. O. Deeble.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Barcelona.

PINES-OF-THE-VALLEY is the village's new name, for the old one was too monarchic to suit the present circumstances. The pines are still there, and the high valley in the mountains spreads out pleasantly to the view. We followed the winding road to what was once one of the few golf courses in Spain, a haunt of foreigners and of that type of Spaniard who loved to imitate foreign ways.

The greens have been fenced off with care, for Spain knows that war does not last forever, and golf is a healthful amusement. But everywhere else there is a tent city, a camp built by and for boys under the military age, who are there receiving premilitary training, in case the war should last long enough for them to be called to the colors. Lads from 18 to 20 are learning there to pitch tents, build sandbag shelters, dig trenches and refuges, drill a little with wooden guns and rely on themselves for that part of their acts which real war will put to the test.

A quiet-voiced, elderly man in khaki received us at the headquarters tent and showed us over the place. Many of the boys were at the moment off on a practice march, which made for less animation but greater ease in seeing just how the camp was worked. First came the tents themselves, large shelter tents with shallow drainage trenches all around them to take care of the infrequent but violent rains. Except during such rains, they serve only for sleeping, everything else being done in the open air. They are floored with a thick layer of clean straw, on which blankets are laid, and the boys sleep in rows on these. Officers have exactly the same accommodation in kind, but a bit more space at their disposal, and an occasional table and chair for paper work. Everything is very clean and very simple.

COOKING is done in the open air, a long row of very modern ranges sheltering under a bank, with an awning arrangement that can be drawn over them in case of bad weather. The midday meal that was being prepared smelled very savory and I noticed a number of children, boys and girls, gathered near carrying plates of various sorts, so I asked a question.

It seems that the village is so extremely overcrowded with refugees from other parts of the country that, do what they will, the supply of food is hardly sufficient to satisfy growing boys and girls. As the army comes first in food supplies all through the country, some of the more daring youngsters began some time since to invite themselves over to meals with the embryo soldiers, and by now some 50 or 60 of them get additional rations which the campers save from their own for the purpose. It is, as our guide smilingly commented, most irregular, but no one can bear to refuse a child!

Cleanliness is taken care of in the open air, too. Long rows of pipes on 6-foot supports have faucets at short intervals which act as showers, and the water-supply is ample enough for practically all to be in use at once. Others on lower supports serve for washing the aluminum plate, cup, spoon, &c., and for less complete washing, for a Spaniard hates above all things to eat a meal without washing at least his hands. The showers are inclosed in canvas, in deference to visitors.

Drinking water is kept at some distance from these sanitary arrangements, and carefully sterilized. Illness has not troubled the camp much, but there was one outbreak of measles, which by prompt isolation was held down to eight cases. A room in the former clubhouse is the isolation ward, and there is a small dispensary as well. More serious illnesses, should any occur, would be taken care of by Barcelona hospitals, which are within easy reach.

THE clubhouse-that-was, a picturesque former farmhouse, serves as offices, laundry and schoolrooms. In the beginning the boys who came were mostly from the city of Barcelona itself, and had therefore had some schooling, so that what they needed was principally a library and guidance, both of which were given freely. Now, however, refugee boys of suitable age are coming in increasing numbers, and as many of these have come from parts of the country where the illiteracy rate is far too high, they have to begin at the very beginning. Special equipment for these adult illiterates has been provided, since it was obvious that the ordinary first readers of childhood would bore them and make learning more difficult.

The boys in this camp are entirely volunteers, although it may be that later on in the struggle it will be necessary to mobilize all who are of suitable age. Their young enthusiasm, said their commander, makes them learn with astonishing speed. I inquired about their officers, and was told that very few are of the professional army, but here again the element of real enthusiasm for the job gets rapidly over obstacles, and officers are turned out in a few months from the government military school, excellently grounded in military theory and more than ready to gain their practical experience in dealing with the actual enemy.

There are only 300 or so boys in the camp just now, but there have been many more at previous times, and the camp is in process of enlargement, after which it will be able to accommodate several thousand. The first use to which the enlarged quarters will be put will be for the new Basque regiment, which is being organized by recruiting from the regiments now covering the Aragon front all the Basques who are scattered among them, and uniting them into a new regiment, or perhaps more than one. This is an excellent idea, as the fact of the language is an important factor, even though all Basques speak Spanish, just as do all Catalans.

These men, for the most part, are those who found themselves in eastern territory at the time of the military uprising, and simply joined up with the first military unit that came to hand, finding themselves among Catalan troops. It thus became necessary for both races to speak the Spanish that is, after all, only their second tongue. Withdrawal of the Basques into a regiment of their own will cure a part of the homesickness that weighs on them, though the news of Franco's last order—the withdrawal of the Basque "fueros," those age-long privileges of their race—has been worse than homesickness to most of them.

BEFORE returning to Barcelona we became for a short while simple tourists, going to visit the cloisters of the noetime monastery in the center of the village. This beautiful construction, one of the few signed cloisters in existence, is nearly 800 years old, but in excellent preservation. For many years it has ceased to be a monastery, although the church functioned as such until last July.

The republic, in the midst of its present troubles, has not wished this fine example of ancient art to suffer. Accordingly, although the church was closed to avoid possible violence from the "uncontrollables" among the population, the restoration of the cloister which was under way last July has been carried on with care. Nor has this "restoration" been, as in some other places, a matter of taking out old stones and replacing them with new. The foundations were in dangerous condition, so the fabric was shored up and the new foundation laid, new mortar inserted between the stones where necessary, and nothing more. In digging for the foundation, an early Christian cemetery was found, the most interesting tombs of which have been carefully made accessible by stone copings around the stairs down to them.

As for the cloister itself, its historied capitals are as lovely as ever. The dove still lights on the roof in a way that makes me think that Tenniel must surely have passed this way. A great tree, undisturbed by excavation and repairs of the stone around it, shades a part of the enclosure, and goldfish swim in the central fountain. A long way from war it seems, and we hope that war itself may never come nearer it than the camp to which the khaki-clad boys were marching back as we left.

The Imaginary Dollar.

Graphs and diagrams of the economic situation always puzzle us, but, as far as we can make out from studying them, a dollar doesn't buy as much now as it would have bought five years ago, if we had had one.

Summer Night.

By Irena Poplawska-Leineweber.

Through moonlit arches of my silent home
I gaze upon the beauty of the night.
The trees sway gently in the silver light,
Enchantment streams from the star-studded dome.

The honey-suckle scent drifts with the breeze,
Soothing my weary senses and my brow,
The spell of wonder envelops me now,
And all my conflicts and my sorrows cease.

The trembling vines throw patterns on the wall,
The fireflies are flashing in the sky
More dazzling than the stars and seem as high;
Faint music floats from nature to my soul.

I bless thee, Beauty, in this magic hour
That healed my spirit with a divine power.

The Early Stuarts

By Don K. Price

AS THE industrial revolution was beginning in England, its leaders found extremely inconvenient certain restrictions which the government had traditionally imposed on the traffic in human labor. Our ancestors were very heroic in the days of good Queen Bess, a member of Parliament explains, but they knew nothing of the principles of economics. Acting on this point of view, the British proceeded, in the names of Malthus and Adam Smith, to do away with the last restrictions imposed on private enterprise by the guilds, the poor laws, government regulation and the small farmer's right in his holdings.

Since then Malthus and Adam Smith themselves have fallen into some disfavor as prophets and lawgivers. For Americans as well as English, untrammeled enterprise, like prohibition, was an experiment that proved too strict a code for even its advocates, and became more than the country as a whole could stomach. We may well drop a little of our contempt for the past as we find out that our own prescription for universal prosperity has been ineffective.

• • • •

"THE EARLY STUARTS," Mr. Godfrey Davies' contribution to the 14-volume 'Oxford History of England, is a history of the years 1603 to 1660 that points to many such clews. If you think that there is no issue which affects the twentieth cenury as it did the seventeenth, you might recall, as Mr. Davies does, the remark of John Selden about the judges of England, whom people were attacking as instruments of oppression rather than impartial arbiters:

"Now the judges they interprett the law, and what judges cann be made to doe wee all knowe."

On the other hand, the state was wrestling with problems of public welfare. It had depended on the guilds to set wages of skilled workers, but had tried since the fourteenth century to fix the pay of unskilled labor. It had been handicapped by unsatisfactory local government, the general dislike for a centralized bureaucracy, the fluctuations in the cost of living. The "power of the middle class unduly aggravated the sufferings of the poor, inasmuch as the former were inclined to regard material success as the reward of righteousness, and poverty of sinfulness, particularly laziness. To work hard and to get rich were thought worthy ambitions, but to be poor and out of work appeared disgraceful rather than unfortunate."

THE setting sounds strangely modern, although it is the century of portraits by Van Dyck and of intrigues such as Dumas loved to recount with such romantic emphasis. But there are modern elements in the story as well as the setting. Under the Stuarts the legislature demanded less restraint of commerce for the benefit of labor than the administration wished to enforce. The administration tried to keep control by selling patronage (in this case, peerages, at ten thousand pounds apiece, which make postmasterships look pretty trivial). The business leaders began to compare their situation with that of their fellows under foreign despotisms; one Richard Chambers could have qualified for the Liberty League by his testimony before the council that "the merchants are in no part of the world so skrewed and wrung as in England; that in Turkey they have more encouragement." The legislature hamstrung (in this case, decapitated) the executive and began to govern the country through its committees. And its victory, as far as poor relief and the control of industry were concerned, was all to the disadvantage of the poorer classes.

As far as political theory went, kings might write of their divine right, and Thomas Hobbes might counsel obedience to any constituted authority as a matter of convenience. But in practice seventeenth century ideas were not so foreign to our own. In one case they even resulted in a legislative resolution that "the people are, under God, the original of all just power," and in another case in the adoption of a written constitution well supplied with checks and balances and badly equipped as to their co-ordination. America inherited, it seems, both the theory and the disadvantages of Puritan parliamentary government.

THIS summary oversimplifies Mr. Davies' careful account of the early Stuarts and the Puritan rebellion; perhaps, unintentionally, it therefore is unfair to his point of view. His book would not have a place in the Oxford History if it were a facile comparison of seventeenth century history with current issues. It is a sound and scholarly survey of its period. It avoids the out-of-date Whiggism of Green and Macaulay on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the sensational materialist or Marxist interpretation, as summarized by John Strachey's "The Coming Struggle for Power," which draws heavily on R. H. Tawney's for sounder generalizations in his "Religion and the Rise of Capitalism." It contains a selective bibliography, and useful maps and lists of prominent office-holders. And its analysis of social and economic history, along with its discussions of education and science, the arts and literature, help to make it a sound and thorough, if not altogether inspired history of its period.

"The Early Stuarts" is not to be recommended to the dilettante in history, nor to the casual reader. It is well worth recommending to the student of English history, or to any one interested enough in our political institutions to observe how their development was influenced by political and economic issues in an earlier century.

Co-operatives in America

"CO-OPERATIVE ENTERPRISE," by Jacob Baker. (Vanguard Press, $2.)

There are two schools of thought on co-operative organization. One school views the movement as an economic philosophy wherein lies the salvation of democracy and world peace; the other school regards the movement as an economic yardstick for price, and as a check on monopolies.

A book which both schools should consider a distinctive contribution to the literature on co-operative organization is Jacob Baker's "Co-operative Enterprise." The publication is a general survey of the growth and extent of the movement here and abroad, particularly of the European. Bases of the survey are factual rather than philosophical. Wishful thinking plays no part in its make-up. Co-operation is presented as a means of economic organization which has grown out of consumer needs, rather than as a cause which has been espoused by the millions who are its members. The book is written simply, facts are presented concisely, enthusiasm is restrained to the point of impersonality. What conclusions the author draws are obvious. When he speaks of the future of co-operation in America, his statements are matter of fact corollaries from his observations of past and present growth in Europe and here.

He writes, "There is no reason to believe that co-operative enterprise will not grow to considerable proportions in the United States in the next generation. It is a method of organization of business enterprise that has developed in the past century, parallel with great transport and communication systems, with high-speed machine production, with mail-order selling, with high pressure publicity and advertising technique, and all of the other characteristics of the modern industrial and business structure."

And farther on, "The facts here briefly given of co-operative enterprise in part of Europe and the United States have their significance for the whole of this country. The course of co-operative development in different European countries has shown much variation; and presumably it will vary in this country to a similar degree. But in its various European developments it has generally brought the benefits of stabilization of the national economy, of an influential check upon monopoly, and of a broadening of purchasing power. These benefits indicate the possibilities inherent in the co-operative method of economic organization, for America as for Europe."

The above paragraphs are evidence that the author has not given way to an enthusiasm for which many of the past expositions on co-operative enterprise have been criticized. He believes there is a place in our economic set-up for co-operation, but he does not believe it will infringe either in the natural field of private enterprise, or in the expanding Government field. He writes, "If one thinks of organized economic enterprise as a triangular structure, the three points of the triangle are private, governmental, and co-operative organization."

One must admire the author's restraint in avoiding use of the well-worn cliches too prevalent in other books on co-operation. He avoids wholly, in fact, the accepted approaches to the subject. The book is worth reading. To one already familiar with the co-operative movement, "Co-operative Enterprise" will be valuable for the well-rounded picture of the movement as a whole. To the uninformed, the book presents an effortless guide to understanding of a means of economic organization which has become important in Europe and bids fair to become equally important in this country.

And last, but not at all least, consumer co-operation is a darn sight more practical than technology, and is much more understandable.

'An Arrangement In Decay'

Lyle Saxon Paints Canvas of Loujsiana's Gaudy Past.

A First Novel Captures Colorful Side of Delta State.

By E. P. O'Donnell.
Author of "Green Margins."

Lyle Saxon was plantation-raised. One of the country's best known journalists, he is also a bon vivant and raconteur at large, lecturer, renowned authority on Loulsiana's gaudy past. This novel is his first. Here he again views with a shrewd and kindly eye the scenes he knows and loves, this time to weave a mellow tragedy, an arrangement in decay, a story that has all the marks of having lain for many years waiting to be tackled. And he has produced a major contribution to the folklore of America.

The book combines the economy of the highly trained reporter with that implied smacking of the lips which belongs to the congenital spinner of yarns. The story touches but lightly on the real or fancied ills of the times, is short on humor, though not without irony. It offers no answer to the race problem—which, considering Saxon is a thoughtful observer of that problem, must be regarded as significant. It is written with a detachment that reveals little about the author save that he knows what he writes about and writes about it with competence and love, which is surely a high recommendation.

About 1760 a rich French colonist went to northwestern Louisiana with a young mulatto woman picked up in New Orleans at one of the legendary quadroon balls. He prospered on his land grant, and died. The property went to his mistress and her "free mulatto" children, who grew and married mulatto outsiders. The settlement became something unique—a rich, self-sustaining patriarchy of slave-owning free mulattoes, with dwellings designed by French architects. Just before the Civil War, the Red River suddenly changed its course—and the destiny of the colony. Cut off from trade, the community suffered dreadful reverses, soon intensified by emancipation and reconstruction. Poverty arrived. Inbreeding followed.

In Saxon's story, 1905, we find them "gentle and kindly" but with "all the shrewdness drained out," unable to cope with life, "defeated," but still proud, clannish, jealously guarding their blood against inroads, black or white.

"Children of Strangers" by a younger or more headlong writer might have been a study of the sad plight of Southern mulattoes—shunned by whites and shunning the blacks. Saxon makes it concern a girl named Famie Vidal who is a woman before a mulatto. The tale also concerns other local characters, mostly half-caste members of the clan descended from the original Frenchman; and an idyllic river; and a lovely countryside.

Famie is first a pituitary girl of 16 living in picturesque squalor with grandparents on the banks of the Cane. Here Saxon, before grappling with its substance, with consummate skill etches in the properties of his tale—and you will look a long way to find their like. At last, portrayed with dignity and fidelity, is one of the most charming countrysides in America or anywhere else!

Now the characters take charge. Not without its localized universals, the yarn progresses with a briskness and suspense that do not mar the limpid, almost innocent simplicity of the style. Famie wants love. This ancient failing gets her into trouble at once, and keeps her there. She will not have her first cousin, Numa, for he is not tall enough. The white blond grocery clerk appears as a candidate, but his ardour scares Famie. However, already she is evincing the old servile and dangerous yearning for a white lover. He soon appears in the form of a vagrant camped across the river. Attempting no detailed portrait of this vagabond—wanted by the Texas authorities—Saxon has built a forceful and wary male whose outlines seem more clear for being elusive and blurred. In quick pregnant strokes of imagery, the ensuing love scenes evoke all of the lush torrid creepiness of a Louisiana thicket.

The lover is soon taken by the law through information given by Nuna, and Famie is left to fend for herself and the embryo child. Numa, who seems more symbolic than real, again offers marriage, is refused and leaves in despair. He returns some months later, as it happens, just as Famie, being delivered by an incompetent midwife, needs medical aid. With part of the money earned in the role of State's informer, Nuna gets the doctor who saves Famie and the child. In this section of the story, Famie's unhappy life after marrying Nuna, Saxon dominates his material with the ability of a master narrator.

The plantation owner's brother Paul, an artist home from the outer world, meets Henry Tyler, a gigantic black fieldhand, and between them grows up a mystic and noble friendship. Paul, a consumptive, has returned to die amid the pastoral simplicity, the soothingly dull, almost narcotic flow of plantation life, all most credibly rendered. He lives alone in a cabin. Tyler plows the adjoining fields. Through the hog-tight fence the white man and the black watch each other's doings, talk; and soon the symbolic fence is cut by the white man. Paul dies, but not before he has helped Tyler achieve a nameless kind of strength and self-integration. In the end, Tyler gets Famie. Her husband has died. Numa was never strong.

So Famie, much jaded by life, now achieves wisdom to find her own social level—or even to go below it. The final chapters, where the tale stiffens into grim and plausible tragedy, reveal Famie as a touching figure—impoverished and deserted by her one object for living, the pale red-headed son of her first lover; ashamed of her black husband; ostracised by friends and kin. The last glimpse of her shows Famie on a mule, target of a kodak held by a patronizing and stupid white woman visitor who opines that "niggers are the happiest people, not a care in the world!"

Liberally sprinkled with expert touches of color and custom—racy sayings; lusty folk gatherings; swollen gourds; bells echoing in the fog; pungent pine chips crackling; the odor of army worms devouring the crops and the poisons sprayed to kill them; men wearing flowers behind their ears; and all the sweet growths and ripplings of a region where few eruptions mar the process of colorful decay—this novel will not disappoint the numerous admirers of Saxon's excellent tales and histories, and will undoubtedly widen his audience at once. The book should engender a clamor for more of the kind.

Both Your Houses in One

Nebraska Adopts Unicameral State Legislature Advocated by Norris.

By John Willard.

ON January 5, the first unicameral State Legislature convened in Nebraska. Thus the efforts of Senator George W. Norris since 1923 to abolish the bicameral system in his State were crowned with success. Helping him in the project was Prof. John P. Senning, of the University of Nebraska, who has prepared a brief volume entitled "The One-House Legislature."

Prof. Senning lists the main arguments in favor of the bicameral Legislature as follows: It permits representation of areas as well as population and affords representation to different classes and interests; it provides for careful deliberation and allows one house to serve as a check upon, or remedy the defects in legislation passed by, the other; it is more difficult to corrupt two houses than a one-house body.

Each of these arguments Mr. Senning answers fully. In the first place, "With few exceptions the States prescribe population as the basis of representation for both upper and lower houses." As for representation of classes, the "rise and development of the Democratic spirit," the elimination of property distinctions between Senators and Representatives, and the growth of the party system have broken down the idea that the upper and lower houses represent different economic classes. "Today House and Senate alike are composed of men whose deliberations and decisions are influenced consciously or otherwise by the identify of interests."

As far as one house checking the other is concerned, he believes that "if there is a check, it exists only within each house on its own bills." A bill once reported out of committee is almost sure to pass the house of origin, and "the unifying tendency of a political party, having a majority in both houses, nullifies the restraining influence of one house upon the other; in the second place, if the cohesion of political parties is strong and the two houses are of different party complexion, deadlocks and friction frustrate consideration of legislation on its merits." Moreover, the executive veto serves as a check upon both houses oftener than either house blocks the other.

Instead of it being more difficult to corrupt two houses than one, Prof. Senning says that on the contrary the complex procedure necessary under the bicameral system is the very thing the unscrupulous depend upon to carry out their schemes. Individual responsibility and the benefits of having lawmakers constantly in the public eye diminish as the size of the Legislature increases.

Just what are the advantages of the unicameral system? It is small. Each member's importance is enhanced and public attention is focused upon him as well as the entire house. Higher salaries can be paid and better personnel thereby secured. At the same time, expenses will be cut: mileage, stationery, and clerical allowances will be at a minimum. Procedure is simple. "Each step in the course of a bill is final and there can be no shifting of responsibility to a second house." In this way the one-house Legislature will be more responsive to the will of the people, deliberation will be less hasty, lobbies will be reduced to their legitimate function, and legislative disrepute will be supplanted by respect Duplication of committees will be unnecessary, and the unreasonable power of the bicameral conference committee is abolished.

The movement for the one-house Legislature hasn't made much headway except in Nebraska. Between 1912 and 1917 the governors of Arizona, California, Kansas, Minnesota, South Dakota, and Washington advocated the abolition of the bicameral set-up; constitutional conventions in Arkansas, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma and Oregon heard proposals for the unicameral Legislature; and in Colorado, Nebraska and Tennessee, reform groups pressed for the change.

In Nebraska, the movement came to a head in 1934, when a citizens' model legislative committee drafted an amendment, instituted a campaign under the leadership of Senator Norris, and secured a sufficient number of signatures to an initiative petition to present the matter to the electorate in 1934. There was a 90,000-vote majority in favor of the amendment.

It is not at all unlikely that other States will follow suit in the near future. As for the Federal Government Prof. Senning has nothing to say. From a national standpoint the problem is much more complicated, and it will take long campaigning and voluminous writing to persuade the American people to abolish the two-house Congress and to substitute a one-house body, as was proposed by the small States in 1787.

A Maverick American

By Caroline T. Simmons.

TO ANYONE who follows the news, Maury Maverick, of Texas, means one of the most vivid personalities in American life. A Progressive and a speaker with a gift for dramatic presentation, no session of the House is ever dull when Maverick has the floor, and no chapter of his autobiography "A Maverick American" can fail to interest anyone who reads American. Whether or not the reader is an American is quite unimportant, because any foreigner who wants to understand this country would read it with avidity. It is a piece of Americana that could have such subtitles as "How to understand a Congressman" or "Thoughts on life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness in America by a Representative from Texas."

That a book like "A Maverick American" has been written will be grouped in many minds with such minor phenomena as the Gridiron Club dinners, where any personality, party or policy is treated with absolute frankness. Maury Maverick, a member of the United States Congress, discusses his life and background and his thoughts on the vital questions of the day with absolute honesty.

All Congressman Maverick's ideas are well worth consideration, but perhaps the most fascinating parts of the book are those in which he described the ways of politics.

"Neither would I have anyone believe that I live in any rarefied atmosphere, and wholly abstain from being a first-class politician when I can. I am not beyond using sarcasm, ridicule, spectacular language, and sometimes working up a little hate. However, I do try to start out as a gentleman, and never use the rough and tumble stuff until my opponent starts something."

Mr. Maverick has no illusions about political life and he doesn't want the public to have any. He maintains that "No one in public office should expect any gratitude or mercy" and "An independent thinker has to fight his way."

Such candor and the originality of the material set this book apart from the general run of volumes published by prominent men. For instance, to illustrate the unique quality of the contents, during the depression, Representative Maverick wanted to know just what the unemployed were suffering, so he became a hobo, traveling on freight cars and sleeping in "jungles." To alleviate the conditions that he found he organized a co-operative colony that taught him a great deal about economics and Americans.

Maury Maverick writes with all the color and vividness that he speaks. His descriptions of his experiences in the Great War are masterful. A great devotee of simple, plain language, he has produced a book that any American can understand. And lest any reader fail to get the point of his ideas, he has italicized and indented all that is most important.

Written in a delightfully readable style, discussions of the Supreme Court and New Deal policies become more palatable. "A Maverick American" is full of humorous anecdote and a pungent irony that clearly delineates the author's ideas.

Originality of presentation and the tremendous scope of the contents have caused a certain confusion. For example, by the end of the book, it is clear that the author favors rural, city and national planning, but it takes a good deal of synchronizing on the part of the reader.

Mr. Maverick has subordinated the story of his life to the exposition of his ideas, but in outlining his life and describing parts of it in detail, he demonstrates the forces in his life that produced these ideas. Born of an historic Texas family, with a Virginia aristocrat for a mother, Mr. Maverick can trace his lineage back to many of the early patriots.

As a boy Representative Maverick grew up in the traditions and surroundings of a pioneer State. His first we gleaned "as the stork flew over the Alamo." "The stork told me all that a young gentleman ought to know. He spoke in a somewhat declamatory fashion and assured me that all my ancestors on both sides of the house always fought for liberty. In France, as Huguenots, they had suffered in the cause of religious liberty; to America they came and, starting with the Revolution, had fought in all the wars."

"But he failed to mention that war was cruel and unnecessary. As I remember he spoke rather well of it. Neither did he say anything about my grandfather's land titles; in fact, I am afraid the stork was a conservative. As for public ownership of antural resources, not a word. But on liberty, justice, freedom and education he was 100 per cent. So he gave me a good start anyway." In fact, Maury Maverick got such a good start that many people believe there are no limits to the possibilities of his career.

Potter Into Emperor

By Mercer Smith

IN "THE PRETENDER" Lion Feuchtwanger has given us another historical novel, this one strong in characterization, so strong, indeed, that this quality makes plausible a plot which without this strength would be thin and fantastic. As the work of the book lies principally in the slow and methodical development of the characters, its beginning will not arrest the attention of the average reader, but those of discernment who read on will find an interesting exposition of the contrasting behavior of individuals under similar conditions.

The scene is placed in Mesopotamia, several years after the death of the Roman Emperor, Nero. The plot is motivated by the intense animosity between the former Senator Varro, out of favor with the ruling regime, and the Governor Cejonius, who represents the newly imposed officialdom of the Emperor Titus in the East. Varro is characterized as one having a capricious love for intrigue and his contempt for the officious Cejonius impels him to undertake "a juicy but dangerous joke" to restore the rule of the dead Nero in Mesopotamia, perhaps in the whole Roman Empire, gain power for himself and humble Cejonius. Through the adroit characterization of Varro the reader is entirely sympathetic to this action which is really no more than contemptible and unjustified devilry.

The vehicle for Varro's plot is provided in the humble and stupid potter, Terence, who was born the corporeal double of the Emperor Nero. Terence had been one of Nero's favorite amusements, and had been taught to mimic the Emperor so successfully that on one occasion he had addressed the Roman Senate without detection while the mischievous Emperor watched in glee from the wings.

THE resemblance of the potter for the dead Nero permits Varro to advance by means of ingeniously executed statesmanship "in a thousand subterranean ways" the belief that Nero was not murdered, but rather the double, and that the true Nero had escaped to Edessa where he was secretly awaiting a propitious moment to reclaim the throne.

As Varro is fabulously wealthy, he has little to gain on that score and at times he is hesitant about carrying out his scheme merely to spite Cejonius, but he is further impelled by a consuming desire for power. In a highly dramatic scene, probably the finest in the book, he confides in his daughter Marcia, defining to her his conception of the significance of power:

"He sat with his legs crossed in the lax oriental fashion, as if by his casual posture he wished to make his words sound less melodramatic. 'Rome means strength,' he said. 'Rome means power. And what is power? The busy, efficient Titus, who calls himself Emperor, imagines he possesses power because he has at his disposal a huge military and administrative organization. I don't envy him. What does he really possess? The sergeant-major's cudgel. The fasces and the axe. Are these power? . . . 'No,' he went on, 'power is something more subtle.'"

THE character of Terence progresses logically from the beginning where we first find him guardedly indulging in his favorite pastime, that of mimicing the dead Nero and permitting himself the secret belief that he is the real Emperor. Although he realized that the important moments of his life were behind him, when he had impersonated the living Emperor, he still longed for and prepared for a miracle which would bring him imperial power, make him "an emperor and a leader, which meant nothing more to him than demonstrations, great public shows, parades, new buildings, brilliant festivals, power, glamour and, above all, speeches." And when the miracle comes, he rises to the occasion, acts the part with practiced perfection and does not question the directions of his pilot, Varro.

Having placed power in the hands of these two people, Feuchtwanger proceeds to answer the question concerning their reactions to power. The intelligent Varro, seeing on the horizon the achievement in fact of his ideas, seems to lose interest when the intrigue diminishes. His mischief has disturbed the equilibrium of his enemy Cejonius. All that remains would be the humbling of Cejonius, which he does not passionately desire, and the conquering of the entire Empire for his stupid Terence, and he is not moved to see things accomplished. He relaxes his grip, permits Terence to get out of hand once, and the empire built from his ideas declines and crumbles. Terence, once holding the longed-for power, loses his reason, no longer heeds the counsel of Varro and basks in an egotistic paradise. The inevitable result, when he realizes suddenly that his power is gone, is the loss of all confidence and again he becomes the lowly potter, apathetic to everything but the emotion fear.

FEUCHTWANGER has drawn others of the characters to demonstrate the effect of the attainment of power on contrasting individuals, and in each case he achieves a logical and interesting result. This is gained through his ability to hold himself aloof and not allow the players to be guided by his own reactions. The characters seem to have a free hand and, unrestrained, react to the devious and complicated business of directing the destinies of a civilization, rationally guided by the inferences of the surrounding circumstances rather than by the will of the author.

It is this quality which places "The Pretender" on a par with Lion Feuchtwanger's previous works of historical fiction, and which will reward the more patient reader who does not let himself become discouraged on reading the first few tedious chapters.

Novel by a Local Lady

Mathilde Eiker probably has never written a novel without finding room in it to fling a sarcastic remark at her favorite animosities; the critics, who either do not take time to read the book they review or, if they do, cannot possibly be satisfied; and the people whose lives are influenced by the cinema. Oddly enough, in the person of Agnes, her heroine of this year's novel, she is most intolerant of current fiction, even a bit rude to the aspiring author she so effectively crushes. And motion picture life, the recipient of her withering scorn, seems to have shaped many events in "Key Next Door"; the love-at-first-sight, the villain outwitted, and the interrupted wedding. One can easily picture Irene Dunne as Agnes, Herbert Marshall as Holden Satterfield and Billie Burke as the trivial Claire.

It is interesting to glance back a decade and observe the changes that have taken place in Mathilde Eiker's technique. At first glance, they seem remarkably few as one recalls "Over the Boat-side," written in 1927. The author still nourishes a grudge for handsome men in their thirties. Those of ten years ago and those of this year's vintage are, at least, conceited and hypocritical; at most, they are scoundrels. The prototype of Alice of "Over the Boat-side" is found in Claire of "Key Next Door." The lives of both are motivated by public opinion.

As for the heroines, it is as if their author had simply transplanted Eltin from her sitting in '27 and reincarnated her in Agnes. Eltin and Agnes are both writers, each feels the great love of her life for a married man of middle age, both are mainly "cool, courteous, supercilious." They even share a weak digestive system that is apt to trouble them in moments of emotional stress. It is almost ghostly at times; "Eltin seated herself in a carved chair with a very high back . . ." Ten years later; Agnes ". . . sat in the high, carved Chinese chair . . ." One is relieved to observe that at least Eltin chose a negligee of watermelon crepe with silver ribbons while Agnes wears one of daffodil chiffon.

The choice in negligees is significant. Eltin's is the color of the hectic time in which she lived; the days of shingle-bobs, short skirts, and speak easies. Hers were the crest-of-the-wave days, whereas now, the wave has crashed and begun its leisurely rise again. Agnes has time for milder hues. The materials illustrate the alteration in the talent of the author. Crepe de chine has a tendency to cling, to define. Chiffon flows, allows for subtleties. In "Over the Boat-side" Eltin determines not to begin writing until she has acquired ". . . the poise necessary for the restraint and fine ironies which she wanted to accomplish." Ten years later Mathilde Eiker has no need to call attention to her art; it is self-evident.

The 1927 sophistication of Eltin is bitter and hard. That of Agnes is mature and intelligent. The two women are products of their day partly. Chiefly, they are products of the increasing talent of Mathilde Eiker for delicacy and strength in character portrayals, for quick wit, and for sentiment without sentimentality. It is characteristic of the change in the times, and the change in the author's own character that Eltin, with a grim pun, should reach the conclusion that "Life was the survival of the flippant"; while Agnes, watching the havoc of the elements which foreshadowed that of her own emotions, remarked; "I like order, even in storms."

Protracted Heat Wave Drives Capital Society Folk to Beaches and Mountains

Salt Water Fishing for Colonists on Jersey Shore.

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

With the heat wave sweeping social Washington to beaches, mountain and lake resorts, there's no use pretending the Capital's "little season" is anything but closed.

Air-conditioned Congress may coolly continue its business up on Capitol Hill, but Congressional wives, one by one, are packing up and departing for more comfortable climates. Wives of officials also are joining the parade out of town, and most of the diplomats and their wives already are settled at resorts for the summer. It's beginning to look as if nobody is staying in town who can get away—if not for the entire season, at least every week-end.

THOSE WHO STILL ARE HERE, for one reason or another, are crowding to country clubs, roof gardens and swimming pools in an effort to survive the sweltering onslaught. And that reminds me, word is going around that a country club atmosphere inside city limits is in prospect for Washington some time soon.

The Shoreham Cabana Club is scheduled to open shortly. A canopied outdoor room adjoining the terrace is being constructed for luncheons and bridge parties in the open. Various sports, including badminton will be added to the swimming and sunning facilities already there. Sounds swell.

Robert Allens Go to Pocono Mountains for Honeymoon; Couple to Make Home at Bridgeport, Conn., After Sojourn

WEARING a chic traveling suit of dark blue, Mrs. Robert Allen, with Mr. Allen, is now at Skytop in the Pocono Mountains for the first part of her wedding trip. Up until yesterday afternoon she was Miss Betsy Hope Watkins. Mendelssohn music carried her up the aisle of the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, where Mr. Robert Nyle Allen the bridegroom awaited her.

Against a background of cool Madonna lilies, green ferns and palms, the Rev. Hillman Hollister officiated at the ceremony.

A YOUTHFUL-LOOKING silver-haired hostess honored a youthful-looking silver-haired woman from out-of-town yesterday when Mrs. Louis Caldwell gave a small garden luncheon for Miss Margarete Clark of Los Angeles.

With a wide acquaintanceship among women who are "doing things" throughout the country, Mrs. Caldwell probably entertains more distinguished guests from out-of-town than any other hostess in the Capital. Miss Clark would certainly qualify in the distinguished class. The only woman member of the Los Angeles Board of Education, she has been active in the adult-education movement in California, and now is in Washington in the interest of improving educational opportunities in her State.

A friend of Mrs. John F. Dockweiler, wife of Representative Dockweiler of California, Miss Clark has met an extensive circle of persons since she came to Washington recently. It was through Mrs. Dockweiler that she met Mrs. Caldwell.

The luncheon, as are many such entertainments given at Mrs. Caldwell's attractive home on Cleveland avenue, was a quickly-arranged affair that went off as smoothly as any luncheon resulting from plans made over a longer period. Since the honoree is a particularly interesting woman, Mrs. Caldwell invited eight of her Washington friends she thought Miss Clark would especially enjoy knowing.

Cool green shades of the hostess' garden served as a setting for the informal party that moved along merrily until well past mid-afternoon. Guests forgot the heat as they listened to Miss Clark relate some of the fascinating experiences. Among the guests in addition to Mrs. Dockweiler and the honoree was Mrs. J. Fred Essary, columnist on a local newspaper, who was particularly interested in hearing the Californian talk about happenings in her native State. Mrs. Essary will leave today for California to spend the remainder of the month and expects to be in Los Angeles several days.

AROUND THE WORLD
In the Capital

With Nancy Archibald.

THE CAPITAL WILL MISS Donna Matilde de Suvich, wife of the Italian Ambassador, who is leaving soon for a vacation in her homeland. Her great charm as a hostess is her winning manner of greeting which gives a little lift of happiness no matter how dour her guest.

While I talked with her yesterday in the courtyard of the Italian Embassy, with its rows of Corinthian columns, shadowing trees and cool-tiled fountain, Donna de Suvich told me her plans for the summer. She was smartly dressed in a black and white print satin frock with open sandals. Her ensemble contrasted with her fluffy, blonde hair and twinkling blue eyes. Her expression is as animated as her conversation and her strong, slim hands clarify her meaning with volatile gestures. Speaking English as readily as an American, no longer dropping into Italian as she did when she first arrived here last fall, Donna Matilde outlined her plans as follows:

"Before I leave for Italy, I am going to try to find a summer cottage for next year. Machioness of Sant'Orsala writes me that Sugar Hill, N. H., is delightful. About the twenty-fourth the Ambassador and I will sail for Italy, where my three children, Maria Claudia, only 2 years old; Maria Fabrizia and Maria Margarita, have already gone with their English nurse. We will motor to Rome, Trieste and the Dolomites and later through the new pass, the Glokner strasse, to Austria. The children are visiting my parents now at their villa in my native Trieste. They are within ten minutes of the beach and their villa is on high land with a forest of evergreens behind that makes the breeze refreshing.

"You want to know more about women's activities in Italy?" she continued. "Public life with them is not so active as here, though many have made careers in music, writing and painting. The state through the corporative system is granting equal rights with men. Italian women are devoted to sports, especially enjoying skiing in the resorts in the Dolomites." Incidentally, Mme. Suvich is herself an expert on skis.

Telling of her recent trip to the Pacific Coast, Donna de Suvich said that they had crossed the border into Mexico. "We saw a few old towns there with little flat-roofed houses," she continued. "Where we stopped for lunch, the girls danced in the square. It was not a fiesta or any special occasion. They were dancing for joy, which was a pleasure to watch."

• • • •

ON THE SECOND FLOOR of the Mexican Embassy, the Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera receive in a great golden room. The walls, carpet and fragile furniture are all the same color. When Senora de Castillo Najera recently showed me the big aviary where she has more than 30 canaries, the Ambassador laughingly called them her "golden chickens," although he has a pet bird himself—a Mexican nightingale.

After she had described the Mexican custom of dancing on the brim of a chosen sombrero, something that requires more skill from a girl than a ballroom foxtrot, the Senora added, "for you know in my country there is always music. Everyone can play the guitar or violin or harp or can sing."

As to feminism in Mexico the senora says: "The feminist group considers the fact that women belonging to the National Revolutionary Party may vote a step toward equal suffrage. Girls are educated less strenuously than boys. There is only one woman holding political office—she was elected mayor of a town. In the diplomatic service the envoy to Colombia is a woman. The social workers who visit homes and instruct and help families are all women. And in journalism there are always women writers and poets."

YAKICHIRO SUMA, NEWLY ARRIVED Counselor to the Japanese Embassy, and Mme. Suma find Washington weather really less trying, they told me, then the summer heat of their native land. The Counselor rises at six every morning to enjoy a walk in the cool ravine of Rock Creek Park. The most beautiful season in Japan, Mr. Suma assured me, is not the spring when cherry and wisteria blooms scent the blustery winds, but the autumn, when the almond and maple leaves are turning.

Mme. Suma wears Western dresses as a compliment to Americans, but she is adapting this style slowly. Her husband was stationed for 11 years at Nanking, China, where she maintained Oriental customs in the home. Smiling and speaking only a few words of English, she fanned me with a fan on which was painted a scene of pilgrims journeying to one of the 53 stopping places on the sacred Fujiyama while her husband told of the advances of women in Japan.

"In the big cities like Tokyo," Mr. Suma said, "the younger women are adopting Western customs. All are banding together to win equal rights with men and the House of Representatives is already in sympathy with this movement. There are many women writers and some in politics. One of the strongest characteristics of a Japanese woman is her interest in family life and the art of bringing up children."

Mme. Suma looked wistful at these words and the Counselor interpreted, "my wife is a little sad because we have left our four children in Tokyo with their grandmother. There are two boys and two girls and they cannot leave their studies at this time. Japanese schools offer 17 years of painstaking lessons in foreign languages and literature and ancient Chinese classics, which is the mother culture of Japan. There are stiff examinations four times a year."

While I ate a sweetmeat made from beans at a special shop in Tokyo famed for more than 200 years for making "yoke," as it is called, Mr. Suma spoke of the Westernization of Nanking, where our American Embassy, is now located and of the interest he shared with the American Ambassador, Nelson Johnson, in collecting rare Chinese porcelains. He showed me a small vase of the Ming dynasty (fourteenth century) with a dragon design done in opaque red, green and blue in pigments said to be derived from jade. There also was a plate of the Sung period upon which in low relief was the figure of a griffin brought out by skillful glazing of an exquisite apple green. He explained, "The Imperial house sponsored the furnaces for these porcelains and only the perfect pieces were kept. Hundreds of other were broken."

Before going to China Mr. Suma was attached first to the foreign office at Toyko, then to the embassies at London and Berlin. He has traveled extensively throughout Europe, Africa and America and finds the Grand Canyon the greatest wonder in the world.

DURING THE SEASONAL LULL, some Washingtonians are spending a good part of the time catching up on their reading. "What books are most in demand in your library these days?" Anne Holloway, Junior League librarian, recently was asked. Her answer indicates that society is reading this summer—"Theater," by Somerset Maugham; "Present Indicative," by Noel Coward, and "The Years," by Virginia Wolf.

Mention of the Junior League reminds me news of some of the members has trickled in to the effect that Mary Chase and her small daughter have gone to Fisher's Island, N. Y., for the summer. Her husband, Howland G. Chase 3d, will join his family in August . . . Ellen and John Ward Cutler spent last week-end with Isabel and Jennings Bailey at the latter's place in Blue Ridge Summit . . . D. C. Garden Clubs Enter Busy Season

Chevy Chase Group to Hear Mrs. Bunting Tomorrow.

Mrs. Pendleton Hostess at Midsummer Session.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Other clubs may stop meeting in the summer but not the garden clubs; for this is the season which tells the story of their work. Morning sessions replace those of the afternoon which are conducted during the winter months, and are usually held out of doors where subjects for discussion are growing right at hand.

Mrs. Lewis Pendleton will be hostess tomorrow morning at the midsummer meeting of the Chevy Chase (D. C.) club, at which Mrs. E. N. Bunting will talk on "Rock Gardens Around Washington." One of the features of the garden club programs is their practical nature. Seasonal discussions are given on soil preparation, planting and care of flowers. In the Chevy Chase club, members visit each others' gardens for friendly criticism and an open forum on problems of planting and cultivation.

Garden Specialists Discuss Problems

Through the winter season, luncheon meetings are held followed by programs at which lecturers from the Department of Agriculture and the Extension Department of Maryland University are the speakers.

Members of the club not only beautify their own lawns and gardens, but for some years have provided plants and bulbs for the gardens at the Home for Incurables. They keep flowers blooming there throughout the season. Some plants are given by members from their own gardens and others are purchased from the florists. In the winter, the club often sends fresh flowers and, last Christmas, gave 50 living plants to the Home.

It arranged an annual flower show this spring in the Sunday school room of the All Saints' Church, in Chevy Chase and, as member of the American Horticultural Society, was one of the clubs participting in the flower show at Potomac Heights May 26.

Holland, recording secretary; Mrs. Edward Mullins, corresponding secretary; Mrs. E. B. Woodruff, treasurer, and Mrs. Maurice Collins, parliamentarian.

The executive board has appointed the following committees for the coming year: Program, Mrs. E. N. Bunting; membership, Mrs. Pendleton; ways and means, Mrs. P. G. Nutting; publicity, Mrs. O. W. Elzey; exhibition, Mrs. Paul Anderson; historian, Mrs. Vorhees; materials, Mrs. B. C. Kennedy; Home for Incurables, Mrs. D. G. Davis; librarian, Mrs. Elmer Higgins; citizens association, Mrs. William Myers, and year book, Miss Mary Davis.

Miss E. T. Hahm Home Is Scene Of Zonta Picnic

MEMBERS of the Zonta Club and their guests yesterday afternoon enjoyed their annual picnic which was given at Bonnie Brae, the home of Miss Emma T. Hahm, one of the members, at 6036 Daniel road. Miss Hahm's estate includes a picnic grounds in the woods where there is a rustic stone fireplace at which supper may be cooked.

She has entertained the Zontians on several occasions and yesterday opened her home and grounds for the club's summer outing. Each member invited several friends and there were about 75 present.

The picnic was arranged by Miss Anna Muddiman, vice president of the club and members of the program committee of which she is chairman. They included Mrs. Lillian Cox Athey, Mrs. Emily Dickinson, Miss Esther Gude, Mrs. Ann M. Harding, Miss I. Malinde Havey, Miss Vera Lundquist, Miss Nannie Meem, Dr. Margaret M. Nicholson, Mrs. Evelyn Davis Redefer, Mrs. Florence Sindell, Mrs. Francis Gutelius Smith, Miss Mabel F. Strider, Mrs. Sarah Sumner, Mrs. Marion Hines Taylor, Mrs. Amelia Gude Thomas, Dr. Estella F. Warner.

Among other members of the club who were present were Miss F. Winifred Burwell, president, Miss Caroline Longfellow, Miss Elizabeth Beresford and her sister, Miss Catherine Beresford, Mrs. Edith C. Salisbury, who was the first president of the club; Miss Frances Powell Hill, Miss Kathryn Fox, Mrs. Louise Stambaugh, Dr. Edith Cosle, Miss Mary Sigman, Mrs. Lena Geese, Mrs. Ethel Hess, Mrs. Harriet Howe, Dr. Frances Marshall, Miss Florence Thompson.

Childhood's Cause Spurs Work of 15,974 Members.

32-Year Record Abounds With Beneficial Results.

Editor's Note: The District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers with 15,974 members, is one of the most active and powerful forces for good in the Capital. Mrs. Edward R. Seal, State chairman of publicity for the P.-T. A., has prepared a series of articles on its history and accomplishments the first of which appears today.

By Mrs. Edward R. Seal,
State Publicity Chairman, D. C. P.-T. A.

THE CAUSE OF CHILDHOOD —than which there is none more important—is the reason for the existence of the Parent-Teacher Association and the inspiration for all its work.

The present organization, first known as the District Congress of Mothers, was formed in February, 1905, the year the annual convention of the National Congress of Mothers was held in Washington. Mrs. Arthur A. Birney, who was the first president of the D. C. Congress, opened her home for the initial meeting, called for the purpose of planning a welcome for the delegates coming to the Capital for the national convention. Later the organization was formed with 22 charter members.

Some years previous to this, Mrs. W. H. Holtzman, a charter member of the National Congres of Mothers, had organized in the District a mother's group, known as the Home Circle Club, which was the first of its kind in Washington. Thus, from a small beginning has grown the large and influential group of 70 Parent-Teacher Associations, co-operating as the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers. The membership has increased from 520 and 19 associations in 1916, to its present size, 15,974 members in the 70 units.

Five Presidents Have Served

There have been five presidents of the organization—Mrs. Birney, who served from 1905 to 1914; the late Mrs. Giles Scott Rafter, who headed the Congress from 1914 to 1930; Mrs. Joseph N. Saunders, 1930-34; Mrs. Louis B. Castell, 1934-35, and the present executive, Mrs. Walter B. Fry, who is serving her second term.

Early in the 1920's individual associations began to weigh and measure children regularly, and with the active support of the Tuberculosis Association, to follow up this weighing with nutrition classes and milk lunches served at mid-morning recess. These activities have been broadened to include the serving of hot lunches in some cases and free milk in others.

Because of attacks made on the Juvenile Court and criticism of its methods, in 1922, Mrs. Giles Scott Rafter, then president, appointed a committee consisting of Mrs. E. R. Kalmbach, Mrs. Lloyd Smoot and Mrs. J. W. Byler, to go to the court and study its operation. This it did for three years, and by the first hand knowledge thus gained, was able to protect the court from much undeserved criticism. The Congress has since been active at the Juvenile Court and for a long period there were present each Wednesday at the sessions two members who gave what assistance was needed. Sometimes this involved the serving of luncheons to children detained while rights of guardianship were being settled. A nursery was maintained and serviced, and, at present, Mrs. Mary E. Strieby is a regular attandant on Wednesdays, serving with a group of other prominent people in an advisory capacity.

In 1916 the Congress furnished funds for the first dental clinics ever to be established in the District—one at George Washington Hospital and one at Georgetown. This was continued until the Federal Congress authorized money for maintaining these free clinics.

Recognize Work In U. S. Statute

The first specific recognition of the Parent-Teacher Association in a United States statute, appears in an act of March 2, 1927, through the inclusion of $1,000 for payment of janitors at school buildings "on account of meetings of parent-teacher associations."

Other achievements in legislation include: Securing a receiving home for children under the Board of Public Welfare, in the act of May 21, 1928; successful opposition to the erection of four-story elementary school buildings; securing an appropriation of $265,000 for a modern building for an experimental platoon school (Park View); sponsoring a mothers' pension bill; opposition to a bond issue, insuring no teacher salary reduction during the depression years; securing larger appropriations for paper towels in the schools; establishment of a policy providing assembly-gymnasiums for elementary school buildings; enactment of a law providing free text books for high school pupils; indorsement of the five-year building program; securing the 3-cent car fare for school children; establishing vocational schools, and through a study of school statistics, securing a more equitable distribution of school funds for various school needs.

"Madame Chairman" . . .

By Suzanne.

THERE ARE GHOST writers and guest writers. Today Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley is both—she is a guest writing in this column about "ghosts," recalling the history of Jackson place, where the Women's City Club, of which she is president, has its clubhouse.

The history of the City Club and its neighbors was gathered for her by J. F. Duhamel, of the Society of Oldest Inhabitants. I asked Mrs. Wiley about it in connection with the Cotton Carnival the City Club is staging Thursday night in the alley for the benefit of its tax fund. She put it in writing in such an entertaining style I enjoyed reading it and thought you would, so here it is:

OLD MAN TAXES and the Big Bad Wolf have driven the Women's City Club into the alley. This is no case of alley clearance. It is a case of alley inhabitance. The members look into Lafayette Park and read the words daily on the statue of "Old Hickory"—"The Union it must be preserved" and they echo his spirit and say "The Women's City Club, it must be preserved" even if it drives us into the alley.

This is all historic ground, however, whether it is in the alley or in the clubhouse. Immediately after the capture of the city by the British, buildings started around Lafayette Park, and St. John's Church was begun in 1816. The Cutts and Madison House (now the Cosmos Club) were started in 1818 and the Decatur House, on the corner near the City Club, in 1819. Commodore Rogers' house, on the site of the Belasco Theater, was built in 1820.

WHEN LAFAYETTE visited the city, in 1825, the municipal government named the park after him. The park then was improved with walks and a wooden pailing fence put around. This was replaced by an iron fence, which later was removed and sent to Gettysburg Battlefield.

Where the Chamber of Commerce Building now stands was erected a residence for Daniel Webster by his admirers. It later was bought by W. W. Corcoran, who lived there until his death.

In 1845 it was proposed in Congress that five residences for the members of the President's Cabinet (then only five) be erected in Lafayette Park, but the project later was abandoned.

• • • •

ON THE NORTHWEST CORNER of Jackson place and Pennsylvania avenue is the house built by Dr. Peter Parker.

No. 4 was the residence of Franklin A. Dick and Gen. Clarence B. Edwards.

No. 6 was occupied by Col. William H. Philip and later by Washington McLean, of the Cincinnati Enquirer.

No. 10 was occupied by Gen. Nicholas L. Anderson and later by William Boardman, also by Senators A. P. Gorman and Dolf, of Oregon.

No. 12 was built by Mrs. James Blair, whose husband made a fortune in the California gold rush in 1849.

• • • •

THE HOUSE adjoining the alley was the residence of Levi Woodbury. Here also lived Gen. Daniel E. Sickels, a New York Congressman, whose wife had a love affair with Philip Barton Key, the latter being shot by Sickles as he left a clubhouse on the site of the Belasco Theater. Later it was occupied by Schuyler Colfax, Speaker of the House of Representatives. On it now is the Brookings Institution.

No. 22, now the City Club (736), was built by the Secretary of War, William D. Marcy, under President Polk, and later bought by a Pennsylvania Congressman, William Scott. In 1902 President Theodore Roosevelt occupied this house while the Executive Mansion was being restored. Representative Rathbourne, of Illinois, and Senator Medill McCormick also have lived there.

No. 24 was the home of Charles C. Glover, banker and philanthrophist. Among other occupants were W. J. Murtaugh, Gen. Frank Steele, Gen. J. G. Park and Secretary of Navy Thompson.

THE CORNER HOUSE was the home of that brilliant officer, Stephen Decatur. He gained great distinction by boarding and burning the captured Philadelphia in the harbor of Tripoli and then escaping under fire of 141 guns. Nelson pronounced it "the most daring feat of the age." In 1816 he was appointed a Navy commissioner. He built the house on the corner of Jackson place and H streets in 1819, and was killed in a duel by Commodore James Barron near Bladensburg, Md., March 22, 1820.

THE WOMEN'S CITY CLUB was started in November, 1919, when there were no other women's clubs here with clubhouses. To go out at night with a latchkey to the club was rather a novelty and 3,300 women joined. Through the years it has maintained an enviable existence. The Men's City Club came and went. The Men's University Club has merged. But in the meantime other women's clubs have grown. Throughout the city there are many clubs for women, so the novelty of being the first woman's club has passed.

B. P. W. Club Sending 30 To Conclave

Member of Washington Group Candidate for President.

All-States Banquet Here Precedes Convention in Atlantic City.

Nearly 30 members of the Washington Business and Professional Women's Club will go to Atlantic City next week-end for the biennial convention of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs opening there Sunday.

The Washington club this year probably has more to compel its interest in the conclave than any in the United States—one of its members, Miss Charl Ormond Williams, is national president, and another, Miss Earlene White, now national first vice president, is the nominee to succeed her for the next two years.

The local club also is acting as hostess at an All-States banquet at the Mayflower Friday night for delegations from other States who will stop here on their way to Atlantic City. In addition to the clubs from States which had accepted the invitation last week, Florida, Wyoming, Mississippi, Kansas, West Virginia and Idaho have responded. Miss Dot B. McDaniel and eight others are coming from Wichita, Kans.

The banquet, at which Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins will be the speaker, will be followed by an informal reception.

Members of the Washington club, in addition to Miss Williams and Miss White, who expect to attend the biennial convention are Miss Nina Kinsella, president; Miss Ruth Robinson, past president, who was elected a delegate from the club; Miss Emily Clarke, also a delegate; Lucy Howorth, alternate, vice president of the club; Miss Nienberg, Miss Alice E. Webster, director; Miss Elizabeth Mann, secretary; Miss Mae R. Murray, past president; Miss Penelope Cobb, Miss Yucetta Stockbridge, Miss Jane Hanna, Miss Martha E. Edwards, Miss Vera M. Lundquist, Miss Clara Beetle, Miss Mary Sanders, Mrs. Blanche Morgan Foote, Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, Miss Carrie Davis, Miss Margaret secretary to the national president; Miss William, Miss Emily Kneubuhl and Miss Mary Stewart, national committee chairmen.

Frequent Shampoos and Careful Selection of Coiffure Essential to Woman's Beauty

Hair Should Be Washed Each 10 Days

Arrangement of Waves and Part Different for Every Face.

By Carolyn Abbott.

WOMEN are all alike in paying more attention to their hair these days. This season's open-crown hats make a faulty coiffure all too conspicuous.

If a new permanent wave is financially out of the question, soap and water will give you glossy locks which, after all, are more important than curls.

No woman shampoos as often as she should. That is a broad statement, but how many women whom you know shampoo thoroughly every 10 days or—if they have oily hair—every week? Dry hair should be washed every two weeks, as it does not pick up dirt so readily.

A beauty parlor shampoo is an excellent idea, but it is possible to give yourself a good wash without so many gadgets. Soap, plenty of water, and, if possible, a spray at the end of a long piece of hose, are all the equipment necessary.

Several Rinses Advised.

Using the proper procedure, wet the hair thoroughly, then part it in several places, rubbing soap into each part. Don't forget to soap well around the hair line. Combine a scalp massage with the soaping process. Exert pressure with the fingertips and work with a circular motion.

After a quick rinse with warm water, lather the hair a second time. Then rinse at least three more times. Most women prefer a warm rinse, but many make the final one cold. It is easier to set waves after a cold rinse.

Lemon or vinegar rinses are safe. A few drops of either in the final rinse water are enough. Science has no corroboration for the report that lemon is best for blondes and vinegar for brunettes.

After you have washed your hair, part it several times to see how you should set your waves. Don't keep on with your old coiffure just because you are used to it.

Consider the shape of your face before you part your hair.

"Of course," Dawn said, "all beauty tricks hinge on the shape of the individual face. These fall generally into three classifications, the round, the oval and the long. Arrangement of the hair is no exception."

The Part Is Vital.

The most vital point in all coiffures is the part, according to this expert.

"Perhaps the most common fault of all is the tendency of most women to part their hair in the center," Dawn said. "Center parts should be reserved only for women with round faces, since they tend to lengthen the distance between the forehead and the chin."

Indiscriminate use of the center part is fatal. It is amazing to what a degree it can lengthen an already long face.

For women whose faces have a natural tendency to be long, a low, side part on whichever side is most becoming is advised. This not only shortens the face but serves to give it rounding contours.

For the oval-faced type, either no part at all or a high side part is suggested by Dawn. But never have a center part. An oval contour should have nothing to detract from its shape.

When deciding upon the right coiffure never pile the hair on top of the head to create an illusion of height. This serves only to make the individual appear top-heavy, with a head too big for the body. The illusion of height may be attained by brushing the hair upward and away from the face at the sides.

Exaggerates Scar.

All older women should adopt a coiffure of this type. The upward sweep of hair accents the upward lines of the face, indicating youth. Coiffures that cover the sides of the face tend to accent the downward droop of other features.

Don't attempt to hide a scar or a deformity with a coiffure—you only draw attention to it.

Don't wear the same coiffure with every gown, morning, afternoon and evening.

After you have arranged your wave it is important for it to stay in place until the hair is absolutely dry. For you who set your own hair or like to preserve your coiffure after having it set at the hairdresser's, there is a new cap on the market which is made of a new special weave which will not run. Its strong binding will not mark your forehead and it may be adjusted by a ribbon to fit any head. This cap comes in a choice of six colors.

After your freshly shampooed and waved hair is completely dry comb it out and you may set it a little better with a slight spray of brilliantine if you wish.

HERE Virginia Grey, Hollywood actress, shows the steps of a good shampoo; washing, rubbing, setting the wave, drying and combing the locks into a finished coiffure.

How to Write Letters

DO YOU ever write letters that give the wrong impression of you? Too bad—when it's so easy to make your letters speak well of you.

How dull and awkward the first writer seems. She says:

"Friend Sally,

"Hear you and your mister are coming to Oldtown for a visit. I sure wish you folks could come to dinner Sunday. Yours,"

It takes only a moment to learn that ordinary friendly letters begin with "Dear" and close "Sincerely yours." It's not good form to lead with a headless verb like "hear," telegram style. "Your mister" and "sure," rather than "surely," are bad English. And a correct invitation should have all the necessary information about the time and place.

The second letter bubbles over with charm.

"I'm eager to see you again and meet your husband.

"Can you and Jack come to a picnic in Baird's Woods Sunday? Most of the old crowd will be there, just as thrilled as I to have you back. We'll call for you at your mother's at 1 o'clock.

"I am hoping you can come."

It's not hard to tell which invitation Sally will accept.

A few easy rules, a lot of actual samples in our 40-page booklet, How to Write Letters for All Occasions, will help your letters glow with charm, be irreproachable in style and form. Make your letters show you at your best. All about letters of thanks, sympathy, congratulation, friendship and love. Also correct forms for business correspondence.

Send 15c for our booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Beverages Aid the Hostess Who Has Unexpected Guests

Canned and Bottled Fruit Juices as Well as Homemade Sugar Sirup Speed Making of Cold Drinks.

By Rebekah Blake.

IT HAS been said that beverages are the main stay of the hostess—especially when there are unexpected guests. On warm days a cold drink adds just the necessary something to the setting.

There is no doubt about that, but it is a question to know just what to put into the long drinks that slake warm-weather thirst. Fruit juices will get the heaviest vote. But there are those, like the actress, Irene Dunne, who hold out for iced tea; some, like the singer, Helen Morgan, who will demand iced coffee, and others who will find the greatest pleasure in a frothy milk-shake.

It is true that most anyone can serve cold lemonade, hot chocolate, iced tea or iced coffee, but the smart hostess is the one who has a list of new and interesting beverages in her recipe file that will delight her guests, rather than just please them. She should have the makings of a cold drink ready at any time of the day or evening. Canned and bottled fruit juices will speed the making. And so will a homemade sugar sirup used instead of plain sugar for your sweetening. In fact fruit may be combined with this sirup to make mixing faster still.

Grape Juice Is Prized.

Grape juice is one of the most versatile of the natural fruit juices and from it many delicious drinks can be made. Served plain, or in combination with other beverages, it makes a popular year-round drink. Because of the richness of grape juice, it will permit diluting and this reduces the proportionate cost to the consumer.

With the approach of the summer season, it will be well to check your supply of bottled beverages, so you will be well prepared to make any of the delicious drinks that follow. They are such inexpensive drinks and find so many uses in the home that no one should be without them.

Two favorites join refreshingly in the frosted grape-juice whip and it is so easily prepared that everyone who enjoys cooling drinks, summer or winter, will be delighted with this recipe.

Crackers and fancy cookies or cakes served with any of these refreshing drinks provides sufficient refreshments for afternoon callers or a light snack after an evening get-together.

Frosted Grape-Juice Whip.

1 liberal scoop of vanilla ice cream
¾ cup grape juice

Whip together until ice cream is thoroughly dissolved. Serve either with or without straws.

Perhaps the combination of ginger ale and grape juice is not new to you. But it is still as good as the first day these two popular beverages were blended. Combining equal parts of chilled grape juice and ginger ale results in a most delicious and refreshing drink.

Iced tea has always been a popular summer drink, but one can grow tired of it if served too often. Here is a recipe for Grape Iced Tea which is decidedly different, yet truly refreshing.

Grape Iced Tea.

3 teaspoons tea
3 cups boiling water
2 cups pure grape juice
4 tablespoons sugar
Juice of two lemons

Pour the boiling water over the tea, cover closely and allow to stand 15 minutes. Then strain, add sugar, lemon juice and the pure grape juice. Chill thoroughly. Some hostesses prefer to omit the lemon juice, just adding the pure grape juice to the iced tea.

If lemonade is a favorite in your family, try this new and easy way of preparing it.

Mike lemon syrup by bringing 2 cups granulated sugar and 1 cup water to a boil. Add the thin, yellow rind of 1 lemon and cook gently 5 minutes. Cool this syrup. Then add juice of 6 lemons (about 1 cup) and strain into a jar or bottle.

When you are ready to serve lemonade the next time, just mix or shake 2 tablespoons of the syrup with about ¾ of a measuring cup of ice-water for each serving. This is an especially easy way of making lemonade for a crowd. If, on festive occasions, you should want pink lemonade, that is easy, too. Just add a bit of grenadine syrup or juice from fresh or canned berries.

Currant Tea Favored.

An older favorite that is still popular, currant tea, is made like this:

First melt 2 cups of currant jelly over hot water, and combine with 1 cup strong tea, ½ cup lemon juice, 1 cup orange juice. Add about 2 tablespoons of strained honey, and shake or stir vigorously. Then pour over ice cubes in glasses, stir and serve.

Chocolate milk-shake is a heartier kind of drink that is especially smooth and delicious when made from a sirup, like this:

Melt ½ pound cooking chocolate over hot water. Then stir into it 2¼ cups granulated sugar and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Next stir in slowly 3 cups boiling water. When smooth boil 5 minutes. Cool, add 1 teaspoon vanilla, and store in refrigerator in bottles or jars till needed. Allow 3 tablespoons of this sirup to 1 cup cold milk, for each serving. Top with whipped cream or ice cream.

Here is still another good drink that gets an added note of interest from a frosting of egg. First mix the juice of 2 lemons and 2 oranges with ¾ cup sugar, and let stand till sugar is dissolved. Then beet up a whole egg with a fork, and shake this up with fruit juices in a shaker. Then pour this mixture over ice in 4 glasses. Fill up the glasses with iced ginger ale, stir and serve.

For slaking the thirst of a large party with a good fruit punch, here's your number. First cook up 1 1-3 cups water for about 3 minutes. Cool. Then add 2 cups of double-strength tea, 1 number 2 can of crushed pineapple, 1 cup lemon juice, 2 cups grape juice, chill in refrigerator at least 1 hour, to blend flavors. Pour into punch bowl containing a small block of ice. When ready to serve add 2 quarts of carbonated water. This makes enough for about 36 five-ounce punch cups.

Grape Whip and Cakes for Callers

WHEN UNEXPECTED guests drop in for a call, be able to serve them with a refreshing, quickly-made beverage and a plate of cookies or dainty cakes. Don't be satisfied with the time-worn beverage that you have been serving but make frosted grape juice whip, which is healthful and attractive, combining grap juice and ice cream in an easily mixed beverage.

'Mother and Daughter' Clothes Are in Fashion

New York (AP).—Fashionable mothers this summer may wear dresses matching those of their young daughters. Several designers are showing "mother and daughter" fashions.

One outfit designed for a girl of 8 or 9 and duplicated in a larger size for her mother is white organza dress with a panel of small lace frills down the front, with sleeves made of the same lace frills, and a rose ribbon sash.

Husbands and wives also are matching their apparel at summer resorts, wearing identical linen slacks and shirts.

Superstitions, Old and New, Are of Universal Interest

Good Luck Ones Sometimes Help, but Beware of the Handicap Imposed by Belief in Bad Omens.

By Rae Lewis.

HAVE you ever tried collecting superstitions—all those little credulities or customs of yourself, your friends or of the world's personages? Study of them will certainly broaden your knowledge, and this chapter of human nature is a truly revealing one. Superstitions, their modern usage, and their ancient origins, are subjects of profound interest to hobbyists all over the world.

Perhaps you believe you aren't superstitious? If you say you aren't, you're either a rare exception or you're mistaken. Superstititons are so much a part of our lives that we're often not conscious that we believe in as many as do savages at whom we wonder because of their gullibility.

Superstititons divide generally into those of good or bad luck. Of course, there are many others, such as the one which holds that if your ears burn it's a sign someone is talking about you, or if your foot itches you are going to walk on strange ground.

You may know someone you consider an exaggerated cynic or agnostic or atheist, or a fellow who manages to convince you he is an individualist and an independent thinker, believing nothing and without fear of anything or anyone; but, if you will observe, you will see him doing something quite unconsciously because it's so natural to him he gives it no thought. Either he carefully avoids lighting three cigarettes on one match, or automatically avoids walking under the gardener's ladder, or makes a point of walking in circles to avoid having that black cat across his path.

Date to Memory of Man.

These beliefs to which we cling, either consciously or not, go back to the beginnings of time and rise from many sources. Some grew from religion, others from philosophies, and many are natural outgrowths of necessity or practicality. Many originated in pagan customs. As a result, and because of varying present-day usages, the word "superstition" is often loosely and vaguely applied and is difficult to define.

Thousands of people, even in America and Europe today, believe that breaking a mirror is a sign of dire disaster or at least bad luck for seven years. The belief originated with primitives, who believed that the shadow or reflection is somehow part of the soul and, therefore, to break that is to destroy the soul in some part.

Many persons in this so-called enlightened age are handicapping themselves through deep belief in many superstitions of bad luck. Certainly, if you are expecting bad luck, you are on the lookout for it and certainty of its coming to pass renders you less determined to combat some misfortune. Contrariwise, a happy outlook often attracts to you happiness and good fortune, so I can see little harm in enjoying good luck superstitions and charms. Just don't let the tail wag the dog!

What harm does it do a bride to believe that she should wear "something old and something new, something borrowed and something blue?" It has become a part of our wedding tradition. But, I wonder if you ever knew that decorating of homes with greens at Christmas time is the outgrowth of an ancient practice connected with fertility. What is Halloween and its fun but evoking the supernatural on the night when all the spirits roam abroad?

Even our handshake of greeting or congratulation is the modern indulgence in an old superstition concerning the right, or lucky hand. The idea of Friday as a day of ill omen on which to start any work goes back to the belief that work was "tabu" on religious days, and this was one of them, although of comparatively modern origin.

Is Your Number Lucky?

Superstitions concerning numbers are widespread and in every kind of gaming or gambling, different players have special faith in certain numbers or their combinations. They may attribute their confidence to numerology or astrology or personal experience, or what have you, but the result is the same.

In restaurants or dining cars you may have seen diners making peculiar gestures, apparently throwing something over a shoulder, but what? You simply did not see the salt which many believers throw over the left shoulders to prevent a quarrel which spilled salt indicates to them.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, July 10.

TAPS were sounded for a good trouper the other day. Flush, the cocker spaniel belonging to Katharine Cornell, who played 709 performances with his mistress in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," took his last curtain. As a matter of fact, he had been retired this past year; for after "The Barretts" had traveled 25,000 miles touring, Flush languished for a part. Miss Cornell went into "Wingless Victory," but there was no dog's role for this actor-spaniel. His last appearance was about a year ago, when at an actor's fund benefit performance of "Saint Joan" he was brought forward to take a bow. He had enjoyed a full billing and program space just like any member of the cast in the long run of the Browning play. His record fails to show any serious mistake or forgetting of his lines at any performance. He was supposed to bark at a certain time, and keep silent during the rest of the play. He did so.

ALICE HUGHES.

Like other good troupers, in his declining years — Flush was 7 when he died—he had left the footlights and had been put into green pastures the last year of his life. On the Cornell estate at Sneden's Landing, Long Island, just an hour away from Broadway, Flush spent his last year sitting in the sun, watching his mistress and her friends play tennis, and observing —without giving chase—the chipmunks scurrying into the surrounding trees.

• • • •

A learned lawyer caused an upset in a Chancery Court just outside New York by uttering a word no one knew the meaning of. Everyone—the judge, jury and reporters present—went scurrying for a dictionary to look up "Jactitation." It means boasting or bragging, or a public gesture which overshoots the mark. Those guilty of jactitation in remarriage were Clara and Alfred Coleman, who, not long ago, went to Elkton, Md., the famous Gretna Green, and, just for fun, took the marriage vows before a notary. They went about boasting of their marriage. Now they are sorry; say they didn't mean it. That's jactiation, and grounds for annulment, under English law.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: Amelia Earhart's birthday was just a few days ago, and on that day I heard her horoscope read by one of this city's best astrologers, who held out the brightest, most certain future for Amelia . . . Speaking of astrologers—that's how you must speak of them. Never astrologists, which for some reason refers to the kind that read your future for 25 cents. When they charge $5 and over, that's astrologer.

Have you tasted canned papaya juice yet? It has an over-rich flavor, but one you'll get used to and like. A lot of New Yorkers are speaking up for a non-alcoholic orange juice that has about the same kick as a horse's neck. I tried each of these sissy drinks on my long-suffering helpmate, recovering in the hospital from being bitten by a taxi. He would have none of them. He kicked and screamed so for a Tom Collins that I rushed out and got him one, sneaked it by the nurse, and now I've set a precedent. I have to do it every evening. That's my trouble. Just a meek, cringing, devoted wife.

VIRGINIA BEACH, VA.—Individuality marks the smart beach costumes for either sunning or swimming this summer. The dressmaker type of costume, fashioned of cotton, usually in gay-colored prints or those of dramatic black and white, leads over the conventional affairs of wool in solid tones, as of other seasons. Halter necklines or those with wide, deep backs are the choice of the fastidious—to promote an even tan and eliminate the appearance of white streaks when donning an evening gown.

Beach coats have much the appearance of formal evening coats; full-length affairs, fitted to the figure, with flaring hemlines, fashioned of India prints, white pique, or brilliant cotton prints. Long beach capes (some equipped with hoods), of terry cloth, vie with coats for popularity—they give a dramatic touch, as a topping for bathing suits of any styling.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

'What to Do?' Asks Girl Whose Long-Time Suitor Now Pays Attention to Another Woman.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with a young man for three years. He is five years older than I. We have often discussed marriage but are not formally engaged. I am deeply in love with him and believe he loves me and though our relationship has been beset with many difficulties, of a personal and financial nature, we have stuck together throughout and hope to marry when he is financially able to support a wife.

• • • •

But here is my problem: About a year ago he visited relatives in a distant city. Two months later he announcid he was going there to spend a certain holiday week-end. Naturally, I had supposed we would spend the holiday together (maybe I was selfish) and I was deeply hurt that he hadn't taken my possible plans into considiration. At the same time, I learned from a reliable source that he had been corresponding with a certain girl there.

• • • •

When he returned from the second visit we discussed the matter, and he assured me he was not interested in the other girl. I expressed the viewpoint that if he wasn't interested in her, I might have gone along, as I have had invitations to visit his relatives in that city. He has never visited there again, but I learned that this girl called him when she passed through this city recently. He denied having seen her, but I learned he not only saw her but drove 40 miles to do so.

• • • •

What I wish to know is this: Am I attaching too much importance to an innocuous episode or is this a forewarning of future evasiveness? He means everything to me and yet I cannot allow him to trample on my pride. There is no need of him to lie to me. Perhaps I would not have liked knowing he drove to see her, but I would have preferred that to knowing I was deceived. To me, blighted trust seems a poor foundation for marriage. Is he treating me fairly? Should I tell him how I feel about his lying? What shall I do? DISTRESSED.

• • • •

The Thing to Do.

DEAR DISTRESSED: You have your choice of two things to do: One is to continue seeing the man on the same affectionate, trusting basis as existed before you knew the other girl—insofar as you can approximate or simulate that attitude—and the other is to break off the relationship and devote yourself to finding another suitor. Nothing whatever is to be gained by probing into or haggling over his alleged evasiveness or his possible interest in, or intentions toward, the other girl.

• • • •

Inasmuch as you are not formally engaged to be married, I suppose the man might reason that he is wholly free to engage in a pleasant friendship if he so elects. If the shoe were on the other foot, so to speak; if, for instance you were the one who had gone visiting and had attracted the attention of some eligible young man while there, you might be inclined to act much as your long-time suitor is acting in this instance. You might find a certain stimulation, a certain refreshment, a certain excitement in the new-found friendship, and if your old beau didn't become resentful, suspicious, jealous and nagging, it might even cause you to appreciate him all the more.

• • • •

When such transient attractions are not challenged, denied or frustrated, most often they die a natural death in time. But when they are attended by morbid discussions and reproachful scenes, they often assume significance out of all proportion to their fundamental worth. M. H.

"Informed" Called "Fool."

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Are there really such fools in this world as the man who, signing himself "Informed," wrote the letter published in your column of June 15? How could this man really believe that pre-marital intimacy has value? A man who had possessed his wife-to-be before marriage surely could never have the same respect for and trust in her afterward.

• • • •

Love would not so often fail if young girls knew the secret of ennobling it—which certainly is not by sacrificing principle, but by disciplining the emotions. Love flowers most fully and lives longest when cherished in the purest atmosphere.

• • • •

Two intelligent young Christians would find a higher avenue to mutual understanding and rapport than by the pre-marital intimacy route. Their hearts would be pure, their standards high, their motives and actions praiseworthy. It seems to me that frank, serious discussion of the realities and responsibilities of marriage; exploration of respective ideals and aims, voiced in chaste language, would be a happier and speedier approach to complete mutual adjustment than any amount of furtive pre-marital intimacy . . . Here's hoping "Mr. Not-So-Well-Informed" changes his mind and retracts his unfounded statements.

Flower Scents Declared Best For Perfumes

Paris (U.P.).—A French perfume expert declares that few women really know how to apply perfume or know what scents suit them. Many women buy an expensive perfume and fondly pretend it suits them and use it for every occasion.

Experts advise that light perfumes, usually suited to blondes, are meant for sports or street wear, while heavy perfumes, ordinarly associated with brunettes, are the best choice for evening wear. It is also a well-known fact that the scents of various perfumes change somewhat in odor according to the type of skin upon which they are applied.

Perfumes should never be dabbed or sprayed upon the clothes as the odor eventually becomes stale and disagreeable. It should be applied lightly behind the ears, upon the hair, on the neck, with a touch upon the handkerchief and lingerie. Experts say a woman should avoid using too much, as an overdose of perfume ceases to be subtle, and even the finest and most expensive scent will appear coarse if used to excess. A woman who has been wearing perfume for five or ten minutes ceases to notice it, but others notice the odor strongly.

Flower scents are likely to prove the most satisfactory, according to French experts. Two or even three different scents are combined to give a subtle blend. These are combined with ambergris, musk and civet to give the scent a permanent quality.

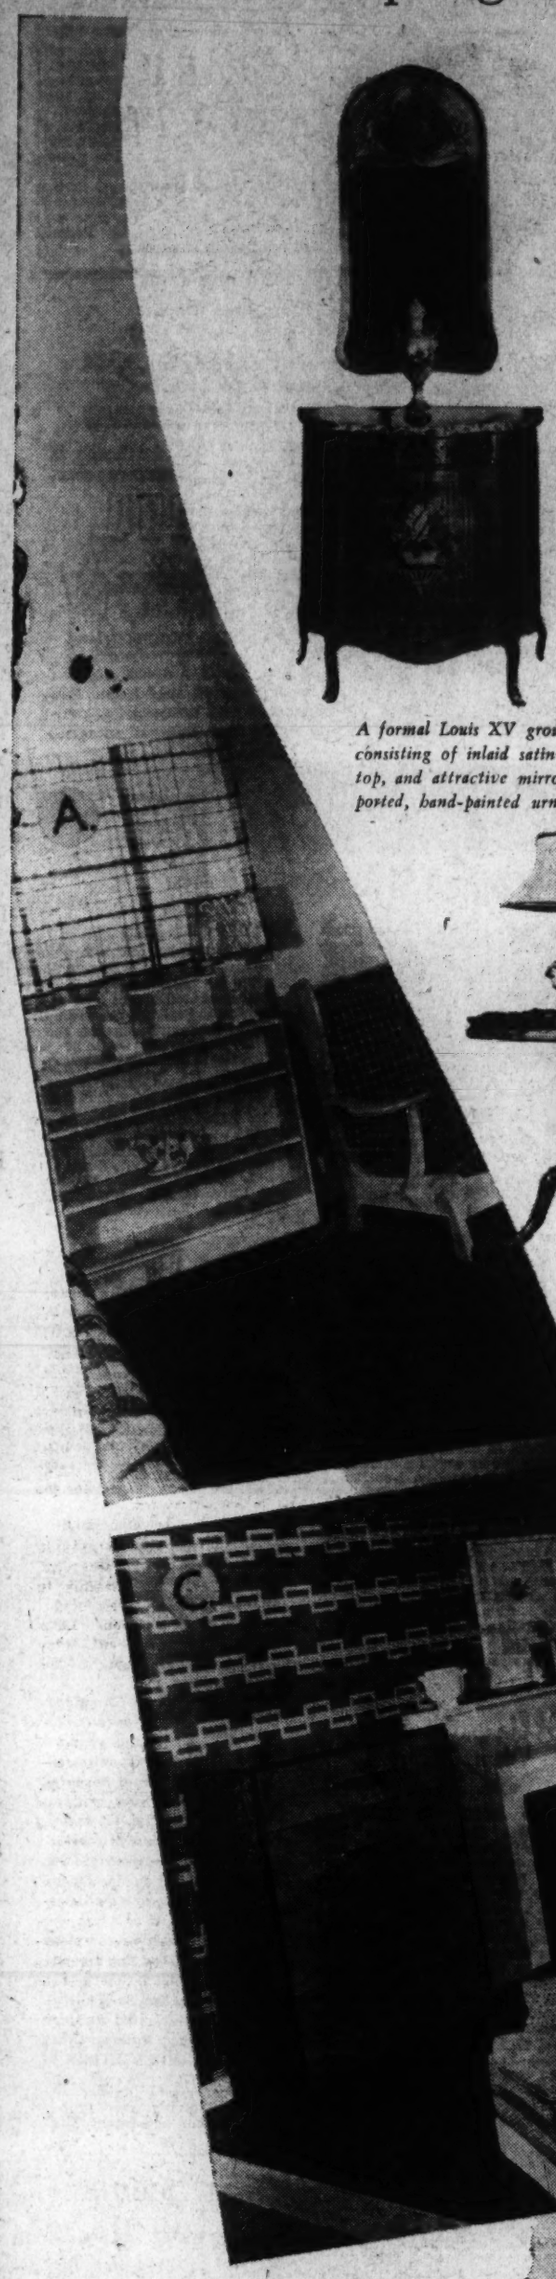
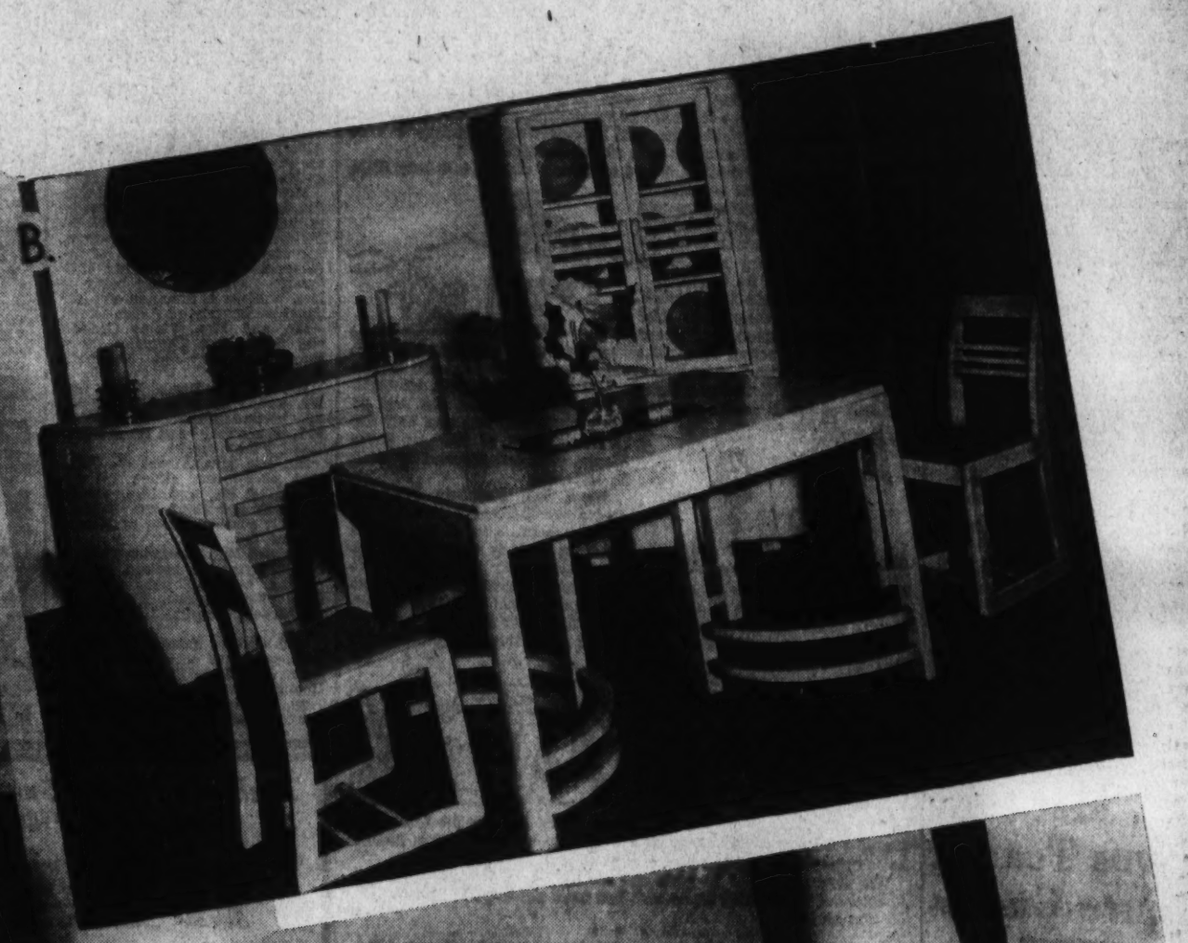
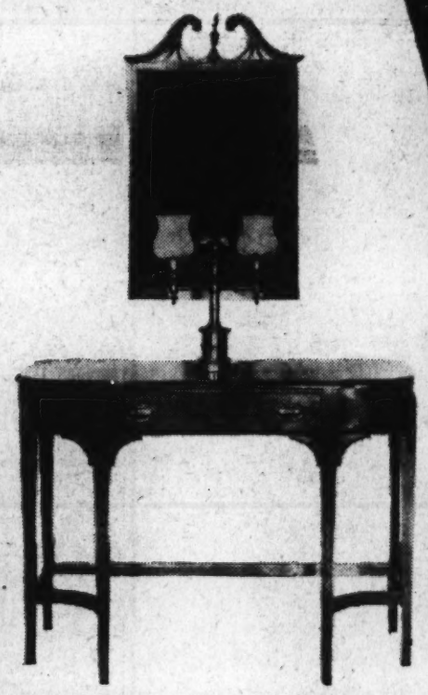
SINCE distinctive rooms are noted for their individual groupings of furniture, it is an excellent idea to follow this trend when refurbishing, and purchase odd pieces to group together in corners and uninteresting spots. This method is not only in keeping with current modes in interior decorating, but is a clever way to cope with a limited budget. With the wide variety of smart furniture on display in the Washington shops, there should be no difficulty in selecting attractive pieces to add color and life to jaded rooms.



A formal Louis XV group for living room or foyer, consisting of inlaid satinwood commode with marble top, and attractive mirror framed in gold. The imported, hand-painted urn lends interest and balance.

An interesting reading group to form the focal point of distinction for your living room; a comfortable chair, flanked by occasional table and softly shaded lamp on one side, and magazine rack on the other.





The entrance hall furnishings are most important, and the ensemble pictured above is an excellent introduction to any house. Note the mahogany Sheraton table and mirror, accented by a Colonial brass lamp.

To enhance an unattractive corner, this distinctive chair and accompanying floor lamp are an ideal choice. This type of chair appeared in 1725, and later was redesigned during the Chippendale period.

A. Simplicity is the keynote in this grouping, consisting of bookshelf, table lamp and occasional chairs, in blonde maple. The dark all-over carpeting is an excellent foil for the light-colored furniture and small accents.

B. A charming dinette ensemble in modern style, available in either blonde or Arcadian maple. It would also be at home in one corner of the one-room apartment, which must serve as combination dining-living room.

C. Arranged to make the fireplace the center of attraction, this grouping combines light bubinga wood and brown English harewood in conservative, yet smart pieces. The dark wallpaper is of modern design.

E. To solve the problem of two windows and intervening wall space, we assembled this distinctive group. The graceful Louis XV love seat is hand-carved French walnut with imported brocatelle coverings.

THE MACNEIL OF BARRA and Mrs. Robert Lister Macneil arrived in Washington this week, after spending a few days on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, very much excited over the return of the famous Isle of Barra, in Scotland, the Macneil stronghold from early days, to his possession as the forty-fifth chief of the Clan Macneil.

The Macneil and his bride, the former Mrs. Frederick Hicks, of Washington, visited the Isle of Barra on their honeymoon after their marriage at Mrs. Hicks' home in the National Capital and received a royal welcome from the clansmen. They found the picturesque Macneil stronghold, Castle Kisimul, in ruins, but with the wall standing.

The Macneil, who is a distinguished New York architect, instantly made plans by which the castle could be restored by using native material and labor. So, at long last, 12,000 of the ancient acres, the ancient castle, towers and keeps are to be again the possession of the Macneil. Before long, as the work of restoration goes forward rapidly, no doubt, friends in Washington will be receiving invitations to visit the Macneil and his American wife at Castle Kisimul.

The Isle of Barra, so much a part of Scotch history, is a busy little island with its natives engaged in sheep-raising, wool-gathering and herring fishery. These industries thrive and the inhabitants of the place scarcely heard of a world depression outside its limits.

Sturdy 8-year-old Ian Macneil, who will be the forty-sixth chief of the Clan Macneil, has heard the news of the return to his ancestral castle with delight and with interest shared with that he displays for his American baseball heroes. With his sisters, Kathleen Elizabeth and Joan Barbara, 12, all three children of the Macneil's first wife, he adores America, the land of their birth, and just now they are having "heaps of fun" at Barra House, their father's country place in Vermont.

When Ian, Kathleen Elizabeth and Joan Barbara return to the Isle of Barra, one of the picturesque spots they will see will be the old cemetery near Castle Kisimul, where the chiefs of Macneil have been buried for a thousand years or more. There is the "Old Judgment Seat" near the top of Barra's mountains in a little circular valley that slopes even as an amphitheater. In ancient days, the Macneil sat in this seat, gathered his clan about him and gave judgments. The last time a chief of the Clan Macneil sat in judgment on this seat to give life or death decisions was in 1545. There are two high-standing stones left standing there now to mark the grace of some unknown Macneil. A shield and implements in the patterns of the ninth century have found their way to the museum in Edinburgh. Under a Maltese cross nearby sleeps a Norse king, unique in history because he is said to have died a natural death.

The Macneils expect to go to the Isle of Barra for Christmas and to celebrate the festival there as it has been observed for generations on that spot.

SOME OF THE MOST INTERESTING features of the Corcoran Gallery of Art are to be found in the art objects and pictures lent from time to time by well-known Washingtonians. The latest loan exhibition to be installed there is that of Old World masterpieces by Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller, who is among the close friends of the Roosevelts in Washington who date back to their previous residence here when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy. These new loans, darkly glowing in color and rich in artistic history, have been hung near the "Madonna" by Lucas Cranach, a painting of a sixteenth century lady by Angelo Bronzino and a portrait of a man by Van Dyck, which Mrs. Miller lent to the gallery last winter.

Other loan exhibitions much admired by visitors to the gallery are the series of ancient Chinese temple paintings loaned by Mrs. George Barnett, widow of the World War commandant of the United States Marine Corps, and the four tapestries which hang over the main stairway which were lent to the Corcoran by Mrs. Hugh Campbell-Wallace, widow of the former Ambassador to France.

It speaks highly of the art sense of modern youth that hundreds of Boy Scouts have taken time out from Jamboree frolics to visit the Corcoran Gallery of Art during the past few days. These lads take time, too, to really look at the paintings.

In fact, so long did one Scout remain in one of the galleries, staring at a Western scene, that the attendant could not quite understand his very special interest in that gallery. After a time, when the lad had been sitting in one spot for more than two hours, he moved over to investigate. In the boy's hand was a pad and with the other one he was moving a pencil over the paper, "writing home." "My, this is a great place," he confided to the guard, "the first place I have found where I could really write a letter home, without being interrupted, since I came to Washington."

Then, with a grin, he marched away to deposit his letters in a nearby mailbox.

Fisher Homes Combine City With Country

Post Is Opening Display House on Grounds Today.

Among the hundreds of persons who are becoming home conscious are a great many who want something more than "just a house." The American home seeker today is accustomed to a higher standard of living and desires a dwelling reflecting this condition. Being thrifty, however, he looks for a residence possessing a refined atmosphere at as moderate cost as is possible.

Alert builders are sensing the large market for this sort of customer and as a result high-grade communities are being developed all over the country to meet this need. Developers are selecting choice tracts that have many trees and other natural advantages. They are subdividing these into spacious lots as fitting settings for the sightly types of houses they will build on them.

By careful planning, they retain the trees and streams that beautify the landscape. They build the houses so that the style of one will contrast effectively with another, and so on, until a program providing individual as well as group beauty in building has been effectively carried out.

Cost Moderate.

The modern development idea of combining luxurious living with moderate cost has been strikingly realized in a sylvan project called Chevy Chase Hills. It is situated just beyond Chevy Chase Lake and only one block removed from the popular and convenient arterial highway, Connecticut avenue.

The delightful neighborhood is made known to the home shoppers looking for the many advantages it offers through the latest Washington Post Display Home opening there today. The exhibit dwelling designed by Louis R. Moss, one of the city's best known architects, is constructed by C. R. Matheny, a veteran builder of some of the finest residential structures in Washington.

This home building enterprise being sponsored by the old established real estate firm of Thomas J. Fisher & Co., Inc., represents a culmination of careful community planning and architectural arrangement styled to please modern modes of living yet kept within the financial reach of the purchaser of moderate means. The appearance of the neighborhood as seen from its Connecticut avenue approach is calculated to give a feeling of welcome and repose. The houses are set well back on broad, tree-shaded lawns. The environment is quiet and dignified.

City Conveniences.

Yet with all this pleasantness of the countryside, the development has been laid out close to all the conveniences of the city. There are transportation facilities close at hand, and schools, stores and churches are nearby. In choosing the site for their operation, the developers had its convenience and beauty in mind.

The Post Display House is situated on Loughborough place just one block west of Connecticut avenue. Loughborough place is a pretty shaded thoroughfare running parallel to the broad and fashionable Connecticut avenue with its regular bus service.

Built on a broad lot, it is a distinguished example of purest Colonial design. A built-in garage is attached to the house. This is balanced on the other side by a wide and comfortable porch admirably suited to warm weather entertaining.

Bookshelves Ready.

Entering the architecturally authentic doorway, the visitor at first glance, is delighted with the handsome and spacious hallway, leading from which is a broad staircase with turned handrail bannister. At the right of the hall is a most generously proportioned living room, the comfort of which is increased by a wide-hearthed colonial fireplace. Graceful French doors in this restful room afford access to the cool

Explaining the title of the new semi-monthly magazine of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, President Paul E. The freehold is what we sell, manage, finance and service. In most cases it is the freeholder who is our client. The name is not, so far as we know, used by any other publication, and we hope, therefore, to make it our own and to build into it the ideals for which we stand."

200 Dwellings To Be Erected In Maryland

Harry Wardman Community to Be Across Line in That State.

That part of Maryland bordering the District line offers a fine field for accommodating mass building operations to house the growing population of Washington. Scarcely a week passes without some residential operation getting under way in this territory which will soon rival other areas in number of inhabitants.

This area has been selected by one of the best-known and ablest builders in the National Capital as the place for his latest large-scale residential operations. It is here that Harry Wardman, heading Harry Wardman, Inc., and builder of some of the finest apartment buildings, office buildings and residences in the city, is planning "Avondale Grove."

The development will be located on Queen's Chapel road northeast, just across the District line, in Maryland. Two hundred homes will be erected in this planned community. Nine have been completed and are ready for inspection, and 11 more are in process of erection. The project will be developed as a community around one of the most complete parking and shopping centers in the neighborhood.

Fronting the large and beautifully wooded acreage of Carmelite College, its residents are assured of a permanent attractive vista and protection against any commercial or industrial encroachment. Catholic University is close to the site of the operation, and stores, schools and churches are nearby. Regular bus transportation passes the scene of

Wage-Earners Are Leaders as Home Owners

Professional Families in Same Income Group Called Laggards.

Chicago—Cities in which more of the wage earners than of the business and professional families of the same income own their homes have come to light. They are convincing the home building and home owning committee of the United States Building and Loan League that popularization of owned homes must reach up to the top incomes as well as down to the smallest incomes on which ownership is possible.

In a message to the league's member savings, building and loan associations the committee points to some surprising figures which the Bureau of Labor's urban study of consumer purchases has brought out. Reports from five cities in the 10,000 to 50,000 group have been made public in this survey and show community habits have a great deal to do with the way families take to the idea of getting themselves a home, the committee says.

Views of Neighbors.

"In addition to the obvious factor of the family's ability to pay for a home in the light of the cost of living and its own income, the attitude of its neighbors seems to have definite force in the matter," comments Edward C. Baltz, Washington, D. C., chairman of the building and loan league's committee.

"Among the business and professional people with incomes between $2,000 and $3,000, in three of the five cities surveyed, a smaller percentage were home owners than among the wage-earners making the same money. In two of these same cities a like contrast is seen between the home-owning habits of the professional and wage-earning groups with incomes between $1,500 and $2,000.

"Savings and loan associations which are closer to the home-owning ambitions and practices of the working man have long felt that this group formed much more of the backbone of the home ownership movement than is generally recognized. This helpful study by the Bureau of Labor gives supporting evidence.

"In two of the five cities studied here more than 40 per cent of the wage-earners with incomes between $1,000 and $1,500 a year were home owners and both were cities around 50,000 population, where nearly half of the population was in this occupational group.

Influence of Habit.

"Cities which rate low in home ownership for all occupational groups show comparative lows among the business and professional group which is best able to afford ownership. Here we find the influence of habit. Thus in the city with the best record, 49.5 per cent of all families living under their own roofs, the business and professional group is 53.2 per cent home owners, the clerical workers are 44.7 per cent and the wage-earners 48.8 per cent home-owning. But at the other extreme, where only 24 per cent of any of the families own their homes, and only 35 per cent of the professional and business people, only 21.9 per cent of the clerical workers and only 19 per cent of the wage-earners make the home-owning group."

Mr. Baltz's committee urged that the savings and loan associations concentrate their efforts upon interpreting home ownership in the light of present-day aims and ambitions. He pointed out that the league's committee on trends is investigating many of the pertinent factors which guide people to or from home ownership with the idea of making such data available to the 11,000 savings, buildings and loan associations which are primarily interested in financing home ownership.

Realty Notes

By Herbert U. Nelson

Secretary, National Association of Real Estate Boards

Is industry scattering to smaller towns? Discussion of this question of decentralization can be heard at any meeting of industrial real estate specialists. Certainly the decision as to the most advantageous location has become again a critical question for many an enterprise. Migrations are taking place which profoundly affect the individual cities and in some cases affect whole geographic sections.

Such a student of economic location of industries as George C. Smith, formerly head of Baltimore and St. Louis civic groups concerned with new industrial placement, and now assistant to the president of the Missouri-Kansas-Texas lines, seems to think the centrifugal and centripetal forces are today about even. While some industries go to smaller towns, other industries move to the bigger towns.

Certainly, just as the plants are being restudied for greater efficiency in the light of postdepression conditions, and locations are being weighed all over again, industries are going one step farther, and are considering afresh what factors should be reviewed in finding the location that will give the best opportunity for successful operation. For example, the big industry in the small town can hardly overlook the degree to which in any time of stress the civic and social problems of the community will be in its lap.

As to the long-term trend of the industrial shift, and of our general population shift, the weight of expert opinion is expressed in the monumental report of the committee on social trends appointed by President Hoover. This study found increase in our population concentrating largely in the urban centers. Very recent statistics are reflecting a considerable movement of return to urban regions on the part of groups that were forced back to farm homes in the depression period.

From the most careful population studies that have been made, it seems altogether likely the 85 principal metropolitan centers in the country will continue as our most rapid growth areas, industrially and otherwise, and will absorb a very considerable fraction of future increase in population and business activity.

Care Is Needed In Opening Up Building Lots

Federal Housing Administration Warns Against Over-Production.

Necessity for care in the further subdivision of land until the present stock of lots in existing subdivisions is utilized is emphasized by Frederick M. Babcock, director of the Federal Housing Administration's underwriting division.

Estimates compiled recently by the administration indicate that at the present rate of utilization the stock of residential building lots created during the last building boom will be sufficient to meet the needs of normal city growth in many cities during the next two or three decades.

"We are proceeding cautiously with the acceptance of loans in new neighborhoods, particularly in those cities where subdivision development progressed too rapidly during the 1920's," Mr. Babcock said. "In many centers we are requiring developers to show conclusively that their projects are ripe for development.

Situation General.

"While the overproduction of lots has not been characteristic of the building industry in every city, the situation is general enough to necessitate the exercise of great care in approving loans.

"In cities in which we find a dearth of good residential subdivisions, we are encouraging builders to open new neighborhoods. In other cities our policy is directed toward rehabilitating or aiding in the development of partially built-up areas. This policy tends to discourage premature subdivision of land and its accompanying evils.

"There are instances, even in communities where over production is most pronounced, in which we find it wise to accept loans in new neighborhoods. Few cities, for example, have adequate subdivision developments for small houses, and we have found it advisable to sanction many neighborhoods of this type."

The need for adequate subdivisions for small houses has been accentuated, Mr. Babcock said, by the fact that in many existing neighborhoods, the excessive cost of improvements has driven the price of lots above the level practicable for development with inexpensive homes.

Orderly Growth.

In other cases new subdivisions are considered to be justified because of the presence of some natural feature which makes the neighborhood particularly attractive and assures its success. When such conditions prevail in the new community, the Housing Administration accepts loans for insurance, regardless of the existence of neighborhoods for substantially similar houses.

The Federal Housing Administration also accepts loans in new neighborhoods when existing neighborhoods contain latent sources of blight which cannot be readily removed. Where examination and study reveal that the causes of blight are ingrained in the very structure of the older subdivision, it is adjudged there is justification for the opening of new areas and previously unsubdivided land.

The Housing Administration is attempting in this manner to discourage the premature development of new neighborhoods and to encourage orderly and logical city growth. The precautions taken should do much to prevent the overproduction of residential lots, which was one feature of the last building boom.

Business Block Sold.

A four-story brick and stone business building at 1223 Connecticut avenue was sold at auction recently for the Union Trust Co., trustee under deed of trust, to Carl A. Martin, for $100,000. Vernon G. Owen was the auctioneer.

3-Story Apartments.

A three-story brick apartment building will be constructed for Effie H. Ingalls at 1765 N street northwest, costing $13,000. Joseph O. Blair is the designer.

Home at North Hills Is Presented by Moss

Homes having the beauty of a country setting and yet close to urban conveniences are much sought after. One of these is now being exhibited with an unusually large lot. This house has three bedrooms and two baths. It is equipped with modern gas appliances and has a built-in garage.

Near direct bus service to the downtown section, it is located at 9303 Colesville road, in the North Hills section of Sligo Park. Presented by Moss Realty Co., it may be seen by continuing on the Colesville road from Silver Spring, Md., direct to North Hills.

Electricity Is Installed At Cove Point Beach

Reports of property improvements at nearby beaches indicate the return of prosperity. Electricity is being installed at one popular resort located 55 miles from the District line. It has a long stretch of white sand beach and is reached by a paved road.

This development is Cove Point Beach, at Cove Point, Md., where a second section has been opened, making more lots available. Many homes and bungalows are being built there. The property is owned by former Senator J. C. Webster and Charles P. Woodruff is president and general manager.

This Is A Washington Post Display Home

Here is a home that has taken the home-buying public by storm! On all sides are heard remarks such as, "This is one of the nicest display homes we've seen; what exquisite taste and careful judgment has been used." Though we have been building homes for 40 years, we feel that herein we have created a masterpiece. Drive out today—if only for the sake of seeing a beautiful home.

BUILT BY BREUNINGER

We have given first consideration to the plan—the pattern for the essential fabric of the house itself. The sequence of the house as a whole has been worked out so that one moves logically from one room to the next, with no wasted steps. The windows and exposures of the rooms have been placed to specifically coincide with the lovely Westwood setting. (The lot has 121 feet of frontage.) A short ten minute ride brings you downtown through nice streets.

FURNISHED BY MAYER

Mayer & Co. have been selected to furnish the home. Come out and see how they have treated the dining room—the lovely Sheraton designs of the furniture—you'll rave about the sideboard—the harmonizing drapes—the living room has just enough of historic Mount Vernon to add color and character, yet the furnishings conform to the modern idea of comfort. Colors are rich and soft throughout, especially in the bedrooms, one being finished in cool green, another in restful pale gray, and still another in warm apricot—the whole home is a compliment to good taste!

Gropius Hails A Renaissance In Architecture

Architecture is winning back the pre-eminence which it lost during the transition from hand to machine work, Prof. Walter Gropius, of Harvard University, declares in a paper prepared for the American Institute of Architects.

Reuniting the art of building and the art of space is the task of the architect of the next generation, according to Prof. Gropius, internationally known for his "revolutionary and logical approach to architectural design."

"There are many symptoms indicating that architecture is setting out again to play a leading and comprehensive part in the generation to come," he says. "Architecture has to come to terms with the machine and is to take the lead in forming the whole entity of our towns.

To Work Together.

"It is not a question of giving one profession intellectual precedence over others, but a natural arrangement in keeping with their different natures. A painter, a sculptor or a craftsman builds up his work personally with his own hands, whereas the work of the architect is dependent upon the collaboration of numerous assistants. Painting, sculpture, hand work and machine work are all to be developed again in an organic relationship with the art of building. Thus we should help the coming generation of architects to become again the backbone of the whole building profession, to develop abilities of leadership by virtue of which there can be unity in the work as a whole in spite of a multiplicity of collaborators.

"We have still to face the widespread heresy that art and architecture are just luxury, that fatal legacy from a generation which arbitrarily elevated some of its branches above the rest as the 'fine arts' and, in so doing, robbed all art of basic identity and common life. By depriving handicrafts and industry of the informative services of the artist, particularly of the architect, the academic education drained them of their vitality.

"Working Community."

"The fact that the architect of today is from outset left too much to traditional specialized training, which merely imparts to him an eclectic knowledge and does not make clear to him the meaning and purport of his work, nor the relationship in which he stands to the world at large, can be counteracted first of all by putting at the beginning of the training not the 'trade,' but the 'human being' in his natural readiness to grasp life as a whole.

"The old idea of school has to be overcome and replaced by a working community. The powers and talents which are inherent in everybody should be united in free group labor, and such a community 'will not learn for the school, but for life,' and by itself will develop into a mature, organic life.

"Training in design must run parallel with the training in the science of building. The designer must learn a special language of shape in order to be able to give visible expression to his ideas.

"If we want to raise the standard of the architect's profession we must make it again socially and economically indispensable to the whole community; that is to say, we must definitely overcome that unpleasant state of being regarded by ignorant people as a costly esthetic luxury within the building profession."

Head of FHA Leads Delegates To Paris Parley

McDonald Is Approved by Roosevelt as Chairman of Architect Group.

President Roosevelt has approved appointment of Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald as chairman of the delegation of the United States to the Fourteenth International Congress of Architects to be held in Paris, France, July 18-25.

It was considered probable that the selection of Administrator McDonald was prompted by the activity of the Federal Housing Administration during the past two years in city planning and its work in improving general building and architectural standards.

During the entire period of its program the housing administration has, through the activities of its land planning section, encouraged the development of higher standards, the construction of well-planned subdivisions, and the creation of intelligent and fair zoning restrictions to protect such neighborhoods which play such an important part in city planning.

The position of the Housing Administration at all times has been co-operative. Suggestions and the land planning section have made a decided mark in building practices in widely divergent sections of the country, and better subdivision and operative builder operations have resulted from this work.

Mr. McDonald received notification of his appointment from the State Department and will head the following delegation: Stephen F. Voorhies, president of the American Institute of Architects, vice chairman; Dr. Chester H. Aldrich, Walter F. Bogner, Welles Bosworth, E. Walter Burkhart, Howard L. Cheney, Paul P. Cret, William A. Delano, William Emerson, C. Herrick Hammond, John A. Holabird, Claude E. Hooton, Louis La Beaume, Charles D. Maginnis, Everett V. Meeks, Frederick V. Murphy, Edward F. Stevens, Maj. George Oakley Totten, jr., D. Everett Waid, A. M. Welch, Mrs. Marcellus E. Wright, and Clarence C. Zantzinger.

Modern Lighting Cheap.

The cost of suitable modern lighting equipment for stores is less than most merchants realize.

New School Planned By Holy Cross Sisters

Davis, Wick, Rosengarten Co., Inc., will build for the Sisters of the Holy Cross a four-story brick, stone and concrete school at 2935 Upton street northwest. The estimated cost of the building is $400,000. Fred V. Murphy is the architect.

Display Home Offers Urban, Rural Benefits

Westwood Sites Combine City Convenience With Spaciousness.

A country home provides restfulness and quietude. A city home gives comfort and convenience. A modern residence built in woodland environs and equipped with urban facilities, combines these good points to contribute a home which is desirable and acceptable from any angle.

An attractive community which features this combination is being developed in a lovely area known as Westwood. The sites there allow for generous lawn space around the houses, there being a frontage of 121 feet for each one. Although retaining all rustic beauty, the section is but ten minutes' drive from the heart of downtown Washington.

Located on a lovely elevation between Upper Foxall road and Glover Park, the locality is being developed by L. E. Breuninger & Sons, Inc.; and is approached over the fashionable Massachusetts avenue northwest The Washington Post Display Home, which is part of the project, is located at 4410 Dexter road, and is a fine example of design, construction and equipment.

The Post's Display Home is of American type, with early Colonial trim. It is designed by Harvey P. Baxter, well-known architect, and situated on Dexter Circle. Artistic landscaping and neat flagstone walks enhance the charm of the surrounding lawn.

The well-planned first floor includes a spacious living room with fireplace, a paneled library with lavatory, and a modern all-electric kitchen. Upstairs are three large, airy bedrooms and two complete baths done in colored tile.

There is a recreation room with pine-paneled walls in the basement. There are also a maid's room and laundry unit. Some of the modern and excellent equipment of the home comprises a slate roof, air-conditioning, and numerous electric outlets.

Adjacent to the living room is a large screened porch. The detached garage, which is connected with the house by a covered entrance, is large and well-designed. The Post Display Home, which is being inspected by many visitors, has been completely and beautifully furnished by Mayer & Co.

To view this home, go out Massachusetts avenue to Cathedral avenue, turn left to Forty-fourth street, then left on Forty-fourth street three squares to Dexter road.

Families in U.S. Held Absorbed In New Homes

Newspaper Stories Reveal Widespread Increases in Construction.

The Great American Family is indicating a keener interest in building their new home. A clearer understanding of the problems which confront them and the foresight which enables them to plan with an eye on the future will give them "better living through better homes."

The best proof of the Family's increased building activity is found in recent stories in newspaper columns which revealed the larger amount of residential construction this year throughout the country. Many of these stories indicate that the builders of new homes in the Great American Family had spent 62 per cent more in the five months ended May 31 than they spent in the same months last year. In dollars, that 62 per cent increase amounts to $162,288,400, which is a lot of money even for the Great American Family. No wonder manufacturers of home-building products, their dealers and the contractors who do the actual building are catering to the desires of these new home owners for the latest and best in materials, equipment and furnishings.

It is evident at every turn that home building, home care and furnishings are subjects with widespread popularity. Newspapers are giving their complete co-operation to the Family by printing more and more stories with news and information on home-building subjects. House plans with accompanying descriptions and discussions of construction problems are features in many weekly home pages. Advice-to-home-owner columns supply answers to thousands of questions on home care.

Model homes appear by the thousands; the Government encourages home-building activities; utility companies offer "home bureau" services; manufacturers have set up laboratories for product development—and collectively distribute the comprehensive stories about their products and services in a book called "Home Owners' Catalogs," now fast becoming indispensable to those who are planning to build homes. All of these influences have joined to help the Family toward their ultimate goal of home ownership.

Last year 41,600 families received valuable help, information and ideas from "Home Owners' Catalogs" alone, at no cost to themselves. It is estimated that more than 60,000 families will receive copies of this big book during 1937. Describing itself as "a guide to the selection of building materials, equipment and furnishings," this one-volume library supplies a wealth of valuable information, with full-color illustration, which is needed by most families who are anticipating their first experience in home building.

Readers of this newspaper who are planning their own homes are entitled to receive free copies provided they are going to build within 12 months, east of the Rocky Mountains at a cost of $4,000, exclusive of the cost of land. As "Home Owners' Catalogs" is an expensive book, weighing several pounds, the publishers, F. W. Dodge Corporation, restrict its distribution exclusively to families who meet these requirements. Those who qualify need only apply by letter, giving all possible information about the home they plan to build, such as its size, location, cost and the architect's name, if one has been selected. The book is sent by mail, postage prepaid. The local office of the corporation is room 327, Colorado Building.

Older generations of the Great American Family had to gather such information as they could over long periods of time, to prepare themselves for the important decisions they had to make in regard to materials, equipment and furnishings. Today's Family enjoys a form of help and co-operation which makes their home-building experiences a pleasure and a satisfaction. No point of information is too small for careful consideration by today's Family, when they are building a new home.

The important requirements is to include the best materials, equipment and furnishings which the budget dollar will buy. The smaller details, given only perfunctory interest previously, are now considered from every angle. Larger units are weighed with even more care to bring out all features which might indicate that one is more adaptable than another to the individual needs.

To all the agencies which have helped them, the Great American Family is grateful. They appreciate the efforts that are being made on every hand to provide them with what they want more than anything else—better living through better homes—at a cost which they can afford.

Kass Realty Co. PlansShopping, Parking Center

Chevy Chase Project Will Be Completed in Early Fall.

What is described as Washington's largest parking and shopping center was forecast last week in an announcement that Garfield I. Kass, president of Kass Realty Co., Inc., and one of Washington's foremost commercial developers, has started construction of the project and contemplates its completion for occupancy about October 15. The architectural department of the company has completed plans for the structure to be known as the Chevy Chase Park and Shop Center.

This development, the third of its kind constructed by the company will be the largest of its kind in this part of the country, having a frontage of over 340 feet on one of Washington's main arterial highways. It will provide parking accommodations for almost 100 customers, and will be located in the 4400 block of Connecticut avenue, just south of Albemarle street.

While Mr. Kass has not yet announced names of lessees in the building he indicated there would be grocery stores, a beauty parlor, bakery, hardware store, men's haberdashery and other stores that supply the needs of a community.

The building will be modern in design and unique in arrangement of floor space and services. The plans call for a series of stores on street grade and two lower floors both of which will be above grade in the rear. On the lower floors, space will be allotted for bowling alleys and restaurant.

Kass, who has had 20 years' experience, has specialized in erecting chain stores under lease and his record includes building for the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., Sanitary Grocery Co., S. S. Kresge Co., F. W. Woolworth Co., Sears-Roebuck Co., Pep Boys and Warner Bros.' Sheridan Theater. Within the last two years, he has completed a parking shop project at Georgia avenue and Rittenhouse street northwest and another one on Wilson boulevard, in Clarendon, Va., adjoining Colonial Village. He is also about ready to start the fourth large parking shop group, location of which will be announced at a later date.

Outside Meters Growing in Favor

In wiring a new home or rewiring a home already erected, the selection of the most advantageous location for the electric meter is often quite a problem, due to the housekeeper's desire to keep it out of the habitable rooms and yet have it accessible so the meter-reader may reach it without difficulty.

Electrical manufacturers and the power companies have come to the aid of architects and housewives by introducing waterproof meters which may be exposed to the weather and attached to an outside wall of the house in a nonconspicuous location.

They operate satisfactorily in such a location and are more convenient for the meter-reader, saving him time if the occupants are not at home and at the same time relieve the housewife of his periodic journeys through the interior of the house in order that the meter may be read.

Paint for Concrete.

Concrete floors sometimes wear badly in spots, leaving an accumulation of white powdery dust. This may be prevented by the application of a coat or two of concrete-hardening compound readily found on the market. In order to correct such a spot, if one occurs, the bad concrete must be cut out and replaced. Many good concrete paints are available which will protect the surface of the concrete and prolong its wear.

Company to Build 1,200 Small Homes

Kansas City, Kans.—Determining the need for small houses from the occupancy surveys of the real estate board of this city, one large company here has purchased a tract of 280 acres and plans to build 1,200 houses. The homes, which will represent a variety of architectural styles, will sell for from $4,000 to $6,000. Plans for the houses have been submitted to the offices of the Federal Housing Administration to determine if the homes will be eligible for financing under the insured mortgage system.

A quiet cozy touch is lent by the recessed bookshelves which flank the doorway leading to the wide and well-lighted dining room and the bright and modern kitchen with its built-in cabinets, automatic refrigeration and soap-savnig arrangement of working surfaces.

Upstairs, the same convenient plan of room arrangement has been realized. Here there are three cross-ventilated bedrooms well arranged on staggered floor levels and each large enough to accommodate twin beds. The Post Display House opening for visitation today and the locality it directs attention to may be viewed by driving directly out Connecticut avenue to Chevy Chase Lake and one block farther.

Chevy Chase Hills has been aptly described by its presenters as "a garden spot for the purchaser of moderate means." This unusually attractive colony must be seen to appreciate fully the beauty of its homes and the loveliness of their setting. The entire project has been developed with one thought in mind, security and solidity of its properties throughout the years.

Painstaking attention has been given to the most minute details of construction. Yet with quality foremost, prices have been held to a minimum that assures purchasers of moderate salaries the opportunity of the more refined and cultured living standards of persons with greater means.

The site of the development offers an extremely wide view of the entire surrounding country and the elevation is a cool and healthful one. Structural features of the exhibit dwelling and other houses in the community include slate roof, rock wool insulation, furred walls, weatherstripping and screens.

Metal Saves Roofs.

Old shingle roofs that spring leaks here and there may have their lives prolonged by slipping small sheets of weather-resisting metal under the shingles that have given way. These metal sheets may be painted where they show to match the color of the roof and will be hardly noticeable.

Well-Planned Homes Viewed As Best Risks

Loans Obtained Easier for Modern Homes, FHA Expert Says.

An increasing acceptance as good mortgage risks of well-planned houses of modern design is indicated by Howard P. Vermiliya, technical director of the Federal Housing Administration, in an article, "Houses of Modern Design Do Receive Mortgage Loans," appearing in the Architectural Record.

"In appraising modern design in domestic architecture," says Vermilya, "it must be admitted that such design is in an initial stage. Much of it has been paper architecture; some has been built, particularly in Florida and California, where conditions for public acceptance has been favorable, and there are a few examples elsewhere. Such evidence as does exist indicates that modern design has a considerable vitality, one that cannot be dismissed as a temporary fad. Modern design has reached a development deserving serious attention not only by architects, but by mortgage lenders and appraisers."

Vermilya cited as a particular example a house of modern design in Long Beach, Calif., characterized by him as an exceptionally fine solution of the particular problems of site and living requirements of the owner, on which a mortgage was written by Farmers & Merchants Bank, of Long Beach, and insured through the Los Angeles district office of the Federal Housing Administration.

Only with considerable compromise can the requirements of modern living be compressed within the shell of the traditional house, according to Vermilya. Arguing, not for blind acceptance of anything that is labeled new, but rather for openmindness on the subject of architectural style, he concluded, "The future of this style is not clear nor is the way easy. The forces of prejudice, ignorance and conservatism are aligned against its acceptance. The majority of houses today are built for the market on speculation and must therefore meet an average rather than an advanced taste. Few persons own their homes without financial encumbrances. There is a tremendous vested interest in existing housing. Mortgage interests, because of their dependence on marketability, which in turn depends on consumer acceptance, prefer to follow rather than to lead.

"If this movement toward a modern architeceutre is fundanmentally sound, it seems that consumer acceptance must be inevitable. Then no man or institution can stop the new development. What is most needed at this moment is a stay of judgment and the willingness to examine the new architecture rationally, together with the willingness to recognize its worth where it has been well done."

Display Must Have Good Background

A good background is absolutely essential for successful store-window display. No matter how clever the arrangement of materials or products may be, it is possible that the desired advertising effect may be completely overshadowed by an unsatisfactory background.

Used extensively as a modern window backing is a variety of wall boards and composition boards, some of which have hard surfaces that can be finished in natural colors, grained, or painted.

Their cheapness gives them an advantage over the more usual expensive material, and their appearance is perfectly satisfactory for the purpose. Window backs should be given a dull neutral-colored finish to minimize reflections. Lustrous finishes should be avoided.

Color Range Aids Use of Mahogany

Color ranges permitting wide and charming variants in interior trim are one of the chief advantages of Philippine mahogany as a decorative wood, according to the Modern Home Institute.

Philippine mahogany currently runs from a rich buff, which approximates the "blond" shades of furniture so popular in smart modern homes, to deep red-brown. Many decorators and architects are using the contrasting light and dark shades to obtain unusual interior effects in office and home paneling.

Philippine mahogany has a distinct "ribbon grain" effect which brings out the color values excellently, decorators interviewed by the institute said. It is susceptible of a high polish, and its texture makes it a wood of high utility.

Home-Owner Expresses Individuality in Color

The individuality as well as the preference of the home-owner are expressed through the medium of color. In selecting the color of the exterior of his house the choice must depend mainly upon its durability. In the interior the home owner gives consideration to such artistic hues and harmonizing tints as will give the greatest pleasure to those who see them frequently.

Ownership of Homes Gains in Twin Cities

St. Paul, Minn.—Increased activities for the first four months of 1937 in the Federal Savings and Loan Associations of St. Paul and Minneapolis indicate increasing public appreciation of the desirability of home ownership, according to V. C. Soash, chairman of the group.

A survey of group activities shows a decided gain in the purchase and construction of new homes in the Twin Cities. Mr. Soash attributes this to the availability of adequate funds for financing.

Contrasting Wall.

White, Gray and Blue French Color Scheme

A pleasing color scheme for the French style home combines white painted brick walls with a shingle roof stained a weathered gray. Color accent is found in the doors and windows, which are painted an ultramarine blue. Shutters are carried out in the same gray used on the roof.

Closed Drying Yard Protects Terrace View

When consulting your architect about plans for a new home it is well, if ground permits, to provide space for an enclosed drying yard. This prevents the view from your terrace, or your neighbor's, being spoiled by clothes drying in the yard.

Small Homes Progress Noted In FHA Study

Marylanders, U. S. Officials Celebrate Advance of Program.

A coast-to-coast broadcast last Friday, sponsored by the Federal Housing Administration, celebrated progress of the national small-homes demonstration program, which is promoting construction of thousands of small dwellings throughout the country, all of which open for public showing this month.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Ellsworth Moreland and their small son, Bobby, of 210 Cedar lane, Bethesda, Md., participated in the broadcast with national officials and public leaders. Mr. and Mrs. Moreland were among the first purchasers of one of these homes and described their experience of home ownership.

Other speakers were Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald, Chairman Frederick A. Delano of the Central Housing Committee co-ordinating activities of the Federal housing agencies, and Dr. Wilson Compton, secretary-manager of the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, who described progress of the program sponsored originally by lumber manufacturers and retailers. Dr. Compton also expressed the congratulations of Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of President Roosevelt, and Don A. Campbell, president of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association of America, who were unable to take part in the ceremony.

Small houses in over 1,000 communities throughout the United States are completed, or nearing completion, under this program. Not one is costing over $5,000, a large proportion being priced between $2,000 and $4,000. It is expected that the program last Friday will give impetus to low-cost house building.

Heating Systems' Costs Important

People who buy low-priced houses generally live on a close budget. This means that unexpected expenses are a serious consideration, and, while the expenditure of a few dollars more or less is important in the purchase of real estate, the initial expense is less troublesome than the cost of upkeep and repairs.

Particularly in the field of heating equipment should first cost be weighed against costs of operation and maintenance. Unless the heating system of a house is adequate the purchaser will soon become dissatisfied. Recent years have witnessed important improvements in design and operation of furnaces.

Types of central heating plants now available may be classified as warm air, hot water, steam, and vapor. Radiator-heating equipment has improved in design, appearance, economy of operation and maintenance, and in the addition of winter air-conditioning.

Recipe Offered In Dining Room Of Mellowness

Waxed Pine and Maple With Ceiling, Walls of Dull Blue Ideal.

By Virginia Jones.

Richmond.—A recipe for a dining room that has an air of mellowness and inviting informality combines the rich glow of well-waxed pine and maple with walls and ceiling painted dull blue, colorful percale draperies and a quaint spatter-dash floor that repeats all the color accents of the room against a brown background.

The wainscoting and cornice of the room are of waxed pine while the furniture is a mixture of pine and maple. Above the wainscoting the walls and ceiling, painted a velvety pale blue, show to excellent advantage. This same tint of blue is used on the mullions of the windows, making the treatment of the wooden strips between the panes of glass distinctive. The percale draperies echo the blue note, combining it with cream and brown against a background of dull red. The draperies, incidentally, have a ruffle of plain blue—the same fabric that is used for the pads on the ladderback chairs.

Pewter for Shelves.

In one corner of the room, the shelves of a cupboard hold pewter ware and some pieces of colorful pottery. Beneath a window an old-fashioned blanket chest with a crude carving of a dolphin on it, provides ample space for the storage of linens. On the wall above is a collection of floral prints that have deep brown glass mats and natural frames. Still another decorative note is added by a string of brightly painted gourds. Single gourds in a wooden bowl make an attractive centerpiece for the main table.

The spatter-dash floor, so suitable for an Early American room, repeats all the bright color notes of the room's decoration against a brown background of the shade known as tete de negre. Spatter-dash is particularly suitable for a dining room floor from a practical point of view, incidentally—footprints and crumbs that are spilled inadvertently do not show against it.

Method Explained.

Spatter-dash requires a short stick and a coarse paint brush. The stick may be tapped smartly with the brush or the brush handle struck with the stick. It's up to you. A little preliminary practice will make you a master of the art.

If the floor is of very old wood, two coats of ground color are necessary. The final coat is applied in small sections and spattered when it has dried to a sticky consistency. It is best to leave a few inches unspattered at the edge of each square, to be finished with the next section. It is well, also, to have a brush for each of your spatter colors inasmuch as each succeeding color is applied without waiting for the last to dry. When your spatter-dash treatment is all finished and thoroughly dry, a final coating of shellac or varnish—then wax—will give added protection.

Recreation Room Is Inexpensive

A basement recreation room that the entire family could enjoy and that would not be a strain on the finances was the aim of a home owner who created a den in the corner of his cellar.

The part of the basement being made into the reception room was painted ivory. A composition floor was laid over the concrete base and a discarded rug was added. Electric outlets were installed to provide proper lighting. Sectional book cases filled with favorite books, a desk, with a few occasional tables, comfortable chairs, and a couch formerly used in the rooms above were placed to advantage in the room.

The children of the family used the room as a study, and a large map of North America on the wall afforded instruction and made a colorful wall decoration as well.

Self-Cleansing Shower Heads Are Developed

Newer Types Also Provide for Water-Temperature Control.

With the increasing popularity of the shower bath either as an accessory to the regular bathtub or as an individual bath, considerable study has been given to the proper design of the shower head and also to the methods by which the water temperature is controlled.

There is a noticeable trend on the part of manufacturers of shower fixtures to develop shower heads which are either self-cleaning or are very easy to clean by the mere turning of a nut, while at the same time their design is such that they give a pleasant and invigorating spray and consume less water than the common spray head. These new types of shower heads are particularly desirable for locations where the saving of water is important or where supplies of hot water are limited, and they will usually be found satisfactory.

Also, from the study that has been given to shower-bath design, there have developed the newer types of water-temperature control which allow for the adjustment of the water temperature by the usual hand valves as the water flows into the bathtub and then by the throwing of a lever the flow of water is diverted from the tub spout to the shower spray, thus the danger of scalding is lessened and the shower bather may be sure that the water will be at the desired temperature when he steps under the spray.

Flower Shelves Look Good

When windows are flanked by bookshelves, the shelves may be partitioned off on one side for plants. White flower pots look good next to the bright colors of book bindings.

Artificial Tiling For Kitchen, Bath

In many houses built a generation or more ago the bathrooms and kitchens are lined with beaded sealing boards, either for the whole height of the walls or as a dado from 3 to 6 feet high. It is sometimes difficult with limited funds to treat such walls in a manner that is satisfactory to modern tastes. One economical way, however, is to cover them with artificial tiling.

There are many types of this tiling, and most of them may be used successfully. As a rule, they can be nailed in place, which makes their erection easy. They come in sheets large enough to require a minimum of joints, and many are scored with depth to the scorings in which to place plaster to cover the nails and give a more realistic appearance. All have finishes that are water resistant and most will stand a good deal of washing and dampness. In some the finish is practically permanent, but others must be re-enameled at intervals.

Of course, they are all imitations and, as such, are not perhaps as desirable as the real thing. But in renovation work they are much easier to install and cause little mess, really serving the purpose and presenting a neat appearance.

Improving Varnish.

A beautiful "rubbed finish" effect may be obtained by using a flat finish varnish. This produces a soft, dull surface that can scarcely be distinguished from a handrubbed finish.

Wood Paneling Used in Kitchen 150 Years Ago

Effect Is Beautiful; Economy Value Is Stressed.

The joy which the modern housewife takes in a wood-paneled kitchen is part of an old American tradition. The soft, warm beauty of wood paneling in its wide variety of fine grain and pattern is as satisfactory today as it was 150 years ago. Because of the economy of paneling, as well as its beauty, when used as the interior finish of kitchens, the demand is becoming one of the notable trends in modern building.

These facts come from the National Lumber Manufacturers Association, which probably feels the pulse of preference for wood in its various uses more accurately than any other organization in the United States.

According to this organization painted wood walls vie with those finished in natural or antique styles and are becoming increasingly popular because of the low cost of installation, of cleaning, and the small expense of refinishing.

Some attractive kitchens in the modern small homes going up throughout the country are showing wood paneled walls. They indicate that ultra modern kitchens still are consistent to the early American tradition and preference for wood interiors.

FHA Exhibits Three Modern Model Homes

Displays Are Operated at Cleveland, Dallas and Atlantic City.

Three summer exhibits are being maintained by the Federal Housing Administration, Joseph M. Upchurch, chief of the exhibits section, has announced. These displays have been placed at the Greater Texas and Pan American Exposition at Dallas, the Great Lakes Exposition at Cleveland, and at the Steel Pier in Atlantic City.

At Dallas there are two separate exhibits. In the Government Building four model homes are featured, built according to suggested designs for houses B, C, D and E in Federal Housing Administration's Technical Bulletin No. 4, "Principles of Planning Small Homes."

Planning Model.

A subdivision model is also shown here, demonstrating the technique of community planning. A question-and-answer machine is also used, dealing with all phases of the construction and financing of homes.

In the Industrial Building 18,000 feet are devoted to a National Homes Show, and two carloads of miniature houses are on display, with full information regarding interest rates, service charges, and other costs incidental to financing under the Insured Mortgage System.

Story in Pictures.

Turning towers, with animated pictures telling the story of the Federal Housing Administration, are on display at the Great Lakes Exposition. Model homes are also shown, and an electric book with information on small homes is a feature.

A demonstration home, based on the House "E" plans in the booklet, has been constructed on the Steel Pier in Atlantic City. In the arcade models of Houses "B," "C," "D" and "E" are included in an exhibit.

In addition to these permanent exhibits, the Federal Housing Administration has displays at State, tri-State and county fairs throughout the summer.

Cover Floors Carefully.

Floors contribute greatly to a room's appearance, so floor coverings must be chosen for their suitability to the purposes of the rooms in which they are placed.

Wallboard Partitions Excellent in Cottages

In many summer cottages several types of wallboard are used for room partitions. Wallboard makes excellent partitions. When painting such surfaces for the first time, a special sealer should be used as the first coat. This may then be followed by one or two coats of inside flat wall paint or semi-gloss wall paint.

Overinvesting Is Eliminated By FHA Plan

Borrowers' Payments Are a Fifth of Income, McDonald Reports.

Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald reports that nine out of ten families obtaining mortgages insured by the housing administration are making monthly payments on their mortgage indebtedness which amount to one-fifth of their monthly incomes, or less.

Mr. McDonald offers these figures as proof that the Federal Housing Administration's borrower rating procedure is preventing over-buying and over-borrowing, two of the primary causes of previous real estate collapses.

An additional check on the size of the investment made by the individual is the requirement that the borrower make a down payment equal to at least 20 per cent of the purchase price. Since second and third mortgage financing are not allowed under the system, a bona fide equity must be established before the mortgage can be insured.

"It is difficult to estimate accurately the percentage of the family income which can be spent for shelter, safely," the administrator said. "We believe, however, that families keeping their payments at or below 20 per cent of their monthly income are not spending an undue proportion for shelter."

"We are using our equity requirements and our borrowing rating procedure to prevent families from investing in houses which they will not be able to retain over a period of years. In so doing, we are contributing to the stabilization of the mortgage market.

"In past years, it has been literally true that almost anyone could purchase any house, if he had a small sum in cash. Although lending institutions would not accept a first mortgage covering the full amount necessary for the purchase, second and third mortgage financing was available.

"Many families, thus, undertook the purchase of houses which they could not afford to own. Interest on the various mortgages often ate up the funds available to retire the principal of the debt. Unable to amortize their principal payments many families renewed their mortgages, in full, at the end of the loan period.

"It was these families, largely, who found it impossible to maintain payments during the depression. Having over-invested, they were forced to surrender their homes. "It is to prevent the recurrence of such conditions, that the Federal Housing Administration has applied its equity and borrower rating requirements so strictly."

Building Gain Reported From Twenty Cities

Washington's Increase for Five Months Is 68 Per Cent.

Striking evidences of industrial recovery in the United States are found in a survey of building construction conducted by the Structural Clay Products Institute, of this city, covering 20 cities wherein are compared the activities of the first five months of 1936 and 1937.

The average gain in expenditures reaches 217 per cent, with New Haven, Conn., showing a gain of 812.16 per cent, construction spending having leaped from $302,376 for the first five months of 1936 to $2,756,372 for the same period of the current year.

Despite seasonal losses in certain geographical sections of the country, the lowest gain in the list of 20 cities was registered in Oakland, Calif., $3,904,343 in 1937, against $2,544,372 in 1936, a tilting up of 53 per cent. Only four of the cities surveyed recorded gains of less than 100 per cent. In addition to Oakland, they were Washington, D. C., 68 per cent; Seattle, Wash., 72, and Portland, Oreg., 79 per cent.

Three Pennsylvania cities, all under 100,000 in population, spent $1,712,635 in 1937, against $678,024 in 1936. Individually, these cities recorded the following gains: Allentown, 150 per cent; Harrisburg, 160 per cent, and Altoona, 212 per cent. In New Jersey, Camden climbed to 195 per cent, while Bayonne soared to 230 per cent over the first five months of 1936.

Boston, Mass., reached up to the 214 per cent mark, but Lynn, in the same State, with a population of slightly over 100,000, spent $782,000 in the 1937 period under survey, to show a percentage climb of 440.

The remaining cities in the institute list and the percentage gains are: Little Rock, Ark., 153; Dayton, Ohio, 155; Niagara Falls, N. Y., 164; Buffalo, N. Y., 168; Columbus, Ohio, 188; Duluth, Minn., 206; Tulsa, Okla., 207, and Gary, Ind., another city of 100,000 population, with a boost of 345 per cent, the third largest gain among the listed urban areas.

Boston and Buffalo were the only cities over 500,000 in population chosen, the purpose of the survey being that the institute attempted a cross-section of building operations on a geographical basis, at the same time reaching into urban centers under 100,000 and covering industrial focal points, many of which have recently benefited by pay roll expansions.

Tint Black Floors.

In well-lighted rooms floors painted black may be used with good effect. If a tinge of the principal color of the room is incorporated in the black paint, a greater degree of color harmony between the floor and the furnishings results.

Plaster Is Ancient As Room Covering

Plaster for building purposes has been used for centuries and still covers 80 per cent of home interiors. Its insulating and sanitary properties were developed by the ancients and its decorative possibilities furthered by the Greeks and Romans. King John of England recognized its fire-resistive qualities after the great London fire. Sanitary laws in many States require all habitable rooms to be lathed and plastered. It insulates against cold and drafts as well as heat.

Taking 1 per cent to 4 per cent of total building cost, there is no cheap substitute, as other materials give much less in service for the comparative outlay.

Plumbing Hints.

For economy in building, all the plumbing in the house should be grouped together if possible. In one-story houses the kitchen sink should back against the bathroom wall. In two-story houses the bathroom should be over the kitchen.

the undertaking and there is also bus service for school children.

Mr. Wardman, whose experience in all phases of building has been successfully reflected in his recent Northwest home projects, will transfer the benefits of his knowledge in the construction field to his new Northeast enterprise. Well trained in community planning, he will retain all the natural advantages of the beautiful location and augment its value with well-laid roads and streets, public utility installation and distinctive architecture.

All homes in this development will be the most modern in floor arrangement and equipment and nothing but the best materials and the most skilled craftsmanship will be employed in their construction.

Hot-Water Heater In Form of Table

Several manufacturers of automatic hot-water heaters have developed units which may be placed in the kitchen and which serve as a utility table as well as a water heater. They are so designed that they form a unit of the same height as the counter shelf in the kitchen and are of such dimension that they fit well into the general layout of the kitchen equipment.

In this manner the hot-water heater is always available for inspection and adjustment and at the same time the well-insulated inclosure of the tank serves a dual purpose. The units may be obtained for either gas or electricity, and a considerable selection of sizes is available.

Light-Colored Ceilings Diffuse Illumination

In the living room, dining room, hall and study, color and style of decoration are important. In order to bring out the full beauty of the furnishings a relatively high level of general illumination is essential. Both natural daylight and artificial light are diffused throughout the room better when light colored ceiling tints are employed. When this is done, one is free to employ deeper, richer wall colorings as desired.

Great Building Need Analyzed By D. C. Firm

Increase of 50% a Year Till 1941 Urged by Clay Institute.

An all-inclusive view of the possible accomplishments in the national field of residential construction—and based upon the pace at which building is now moving—indicates that the erection of homes in the United States must increase by 50 per cent each year through 1941 in order to reduce the present housing shortage by one-third.

Findings of the Structural Clay Products Institute, of this city, bring out clearly the great need for 6,000,000 dwelling units. Real estate boards in the Central and Middle West have agreed on this figure, based upon a survey of the deficit areas created by the depression.

Analysis by Carmak.

J. J. Cermak, secretary of the institute, presents the following analysis of the building situation, founded upon Department of Labor compilations for the first months of 1937:

"At the rate residential construction has moved from January through April of the current year, 1937 should see 205,788 new dwelling units completed and probably occupied. Such an achievement would show a gain over 1936 of 68 per cent.

"Conservatively estimated and assuming a steady building pace during the next four years, that is, through 1941, some 433,000 new homes will be built. But, assuming that building continues to advance and shows a 50 per cent increase for each of the four years (through 1941), the dwelling units completed will be 2,495,152.

6,000,000 Homes Needed.

"This figure is something over a third of the 6,000,000 homes needed to properly house the total American population. Any calculation on the time needed to meet completely the housing need is, of course, a statistical flirtation, based on mythical conditions.

"Though the building of dwellings may be a matter of figures, the creation of homes is something of far greater significance. Translated into human terms that is what the housing shortage presents as its chief problem.

"Builders and manufacturers alike are cognizant of that social demand, which is apparent in the convenience and comfort that the new types of American houses offer. The buying or building public is insistent upon purchasing the physical dwelling elements that open the way to home creation on a socialized basis. Safety in construction, as typified by brick, is demanded because such security guarantees one of a great kind, security of mind."

Mantel's Art Plan Should Aid Room

Fireplaces may be a focal point of interest in a room, but the arrangement of articles on the mantel very easily becomes tiresome. It is a wise housewife who changes such an arrangement frequently. It has become a sort of "old American custom" to have a mirror or picture centered above the mantel, a pair of something or other on either end and a clock or bowl of fruit or flowers in the middle.

Basically, this is a perfectly good arrangement. The systematic way it is used, however, may be faulty. Try a pair of pictures on either side of the wall and a set of porcelain figures in the center of the mantel. Or try sconces on the wall just to the far side of the mantel and bowls of trailing ivy on the shelf.

An extremely modern arrangement would be an article on either end of the shelf but not a matching pair. A pair of white five-finger vases would lend a note of formality.

Baseboard Should Be Rested Upon Subfloor

It is good practice to rest the baseboard on the subfloor and butt the finish up against it to avoid the base pulling away from the floor if shrinkage or settlement occur. Even if it is set on top of the finish floor, it should be nailed to the subfloor and not to the studs.

Put Bookshelves in Hall.

Bookshelves may be built in a hall for the double purpose of offering additional storage space for the volumes and to create an inviting entrance to the home. A long, narrow hall is particularly adaptable to this treatment.

FHA Mortgages Taken in 80% Of U.S. Counties

Areas Covered Include 97 Per Cent of Nation's Farm Land.

The Federal Housing Administration announces that residential mortgages have been accepted for its insurance in four-fifths of the counties throughout the United States in which are located 97 per cent of the nonfarm population of the country, the market to which Housing Administration activities are limited. The figures were determined from totals recorded by the Housing Administration as of March 31, 1937.

The Housing Administration has accepted mortgages for insurance in 2,416 counties throughout the country, or in approximately four-fifths of the 3,100 counties in the Union. As might be expected, not all counties shared equally in the mortgage distribution, as the larger centers of population showed higher percentages in the amount of mortgages accepted.

In approximately 2,000 counties up to 100 mortgages have been insured as of March 31. In some 60 counties located within metropolitan areas, and comprising around 40 per cent of the nonfarm population, 80 per cent of Housing Administration business has been transacted. These counties reported 500 or more mortgages each as of March 31, 1937.

The outstanding county in the country in respect to insured mortgage business volume is Los Angeles County, Calif., where over 8,500 mortgages have been accepted for insurance. The next in volume is Wayne County, Mich., which includes over 4,500 accepted mortgages; San Francisco County, Calif., third, with over 3,600 mortgages accepted for insurance; and Cook County, Ill., fourth, with more than 3,300 mortgages accepted for insurance.

Bright-Color Paints Favored for Homes

As America climbs out of the depression bright color is flaunted as a victorious banner. Brighter, gayer shades in clothes and brighter colors in the home are the vogue. If you plan to repaint your home, bear in mind that no longer need the conventional home be of dull red, grey or white.

Many color combinations are being used effectively for modern homes. One house in an eastern State had walls of deep yellow, black door and an orange frame. A grey stucco house in the Middle West had roof and blinds of bright red. A California house had three sides of a pale pink, but the rear of the building, which opened on a garden, was pale yellow, the owner believing this color a more effective background for trees and flowers.

Metal Sinks Strong.

Sinks made of thin metal sheets are easy on the dishes and at the same time strong enough to withstand the rough usage that a kitchen sink usually gets.

Novel China Cupboard.

In old New England homes cupboards were an essential part of the house. A novel arrangement was a cupboard with glass doors over the fireplace. This provides an excellent place for a collection of colored glass or china.

America-Made Home Material DriveLaunched

Club Organized in N. Y. Announces Campaign in All U. S.

New York, N. Y.—In an official statement, the Made in America Club announces the launching of a national crusade that will promote and crystallize sentiment for the exclusive use of American materials in the construction of American homes.

"A real American home is one that is constructed entirely of American products, from foundation to roof," declared Capt. F. X. A. Eble, national director of the Made in America Club.

"At a time when the American markets are being flooded with foreign imports there is one American sanctuary that should not be invaded, and that is the very home in which we live.

"Loyalty" Cited.

"The Federal State and local governments, in their loyalty to business and to American workers, have mandatory provisions in their building contracts that favor the use of American materials. Shall we show loyalty to this same spirit which is intended for our general good, or shall we, in our personal greed for slightly greater profit, use the foreign material?

"The builder and seller of American homes will be the first to benefit in this crusade. They will be furnished with official signs of the Made in America Club, signifying to the American public that the home or other building is 100 per cent American. They will grasp the opportunity to use this feature in their advertising and selling.

Co-operation Claimed.

"Patriotic organizations are now co-operating with us in this campaign, several of the larger national associations already signifying their readiness to go along with us in a very tangible way.

"This American building crusade is not in the interest of any particular product or brand. All we ask is that all materials used shall be American.

"One point I wish to make clear in this campaign as well as in our other campaigns for American products: We would still be the world's largest user of imports if we confined our purchases to necessary products—articles that we do not make or grow here, such as tea, coffee, spices, tin, rubber, tropical fruits, etc," concluded Capt. Eble.

The Made in America Club is announced as a nonprofit, chartered association, its main objective, according to its literature, being to increase American business, to raise purchasing power and to provide jobs for unemployed workers.

All-Year Home In Country Is Now Available

A year' round country home, within less than a half hour's drive of downtown Washington, where the family may combine all the conveniences of the city with the many delights of the countryside, is the ambition and dream of many Washingtonians these days.

Especially is this true with respect to business and professional men who are subject to excessive nerve and mental pressure. Day after day of these unrelenting exactions wear away reserve and resistance. When summer comes, many of these men are forced to leave their business and professions and go away for several months in an effort to rebuild and restore.

A fairly recently established "design for living" in nearby Montgomery County may prove of interest to types of men just referred to. It is "The Burnt Mills Idea," now being worked out at Burnt Mills Hills, just off the Colesville pike, three miles beyond Silver Spring traffic light.

The plan for living in this most interesting community is such that the entire family may enjoy the equivalent to a perpetual vacation in a year 'round country home on one to five acres of meadow or woodland. And the head of the family may go home each day after the grind of the city and return to work the following day refreshed and renewed in mind and body.

With an altitude of 400 feet, the nights are cool. The quiet and restful countryside induces long, refreshing sleep. The beautiful, natural surroundings divert the mind from the intense interests of the city and produce a degree of rest and relaxation that enables the daily restoration of energy so essential in these modern times.

More than 20 Washington families are now living in this neighborhood of country homes—some on one acre, others on two to five acres. Each home is architecturally distinct from the rest, and the varied farmhouse types prevail. It is especially a place for children, there now being nearly 50.

This community is less than 25 minutes' drive from downtown Washington. Four attractive homes are now completed and open for inspection, ranging in price from $18,000 upward. One of these is "The Norman," a very beautiful 18-room and 5-bath home on nearly three acres of woodland. The unusual character of the general development, as well as the architecture and exceptional landscape beauty, are especially inviting to those whose interest or background responds to such things.

Old-Style Kitchens No Longer Popular

The large kitchens of old-fashioned houses do not adapt themselves easily to modern housekeeping when the housewife plans her routine with a view to step-saving. Many people like the general roominess of the house of the large-kitchen era, but want their domestic workshop more compact.

Public Held Wiser In House Purchase

Philadelphia, Pa.—Today's public is house-conscious, according to William E. Johnson, who points out in an article that homes must have modern conveniences, be substantially built, and be wisely financed if they are to find a market.

Ten years ago, the article says, a school boy could sell a house and there were so many financing schemes of one kind or another in existence that rarely would a purchaser have trouble financing his home. The layman knew little about building practices and houses were bought largely on outward appearances with little thought to the soundness of construction and the trend of the neighborhood.

The modern home buyer, Johnson writes, wants to know that the house he is considering is well built of the best materials and is in a neighborhood that will not deteriorate and wants to know that he will not be faced with expensive mortgage renewals that bring him no nearer actual ownership. He wants a long-term amortized mortgage with monthly payments that are within the limits of his income.

Playhouse Offers Many Advantages

The family with children planning to build a home may find a playhouse has many advantages. If there is enough ground, the playhouse should be provided for when plans for the house are being drawn.

The architect who draws the plans for the house should be consulted regarding the best location for the playhouse. Sometimes when space is limited, such a playroom may be built as an addition to the garage, or even as a second floor to this building.

A playhouse offers the child a place of his very own where his toys and hobbies may be undisturbed and at the same time gives the mother the knowledge that the child is in a safe place. It offers recreation room during unfavorable weather and avoids disturbing noise in the house. The right of privacy and a sense of possession is fostered in a child that has a place of his own.

Insulation Essential.

Adequate insulation adds greatly to the comfort of a home. When properly installed, it retards heat and cold, reduces heating cost, protects health, and promotes economy.

Outdoor Fireplace Popular in Garden

Outdoor fireplaces are no longer confined to the picnic grounds, but are found frequently in modern gardens. This feature, which has been popular on the West Coast for a long time, is rapidly becoming a favorite throughout the country with the garden enthusiast.

Builders of new homes are planning for outdoor meals when they plot their garden and new homes are purchased with a view to converting a corner of the garden to a dining alcove.

If you are planning to build an outside fireplace and wish to, a landscape architect may be consulted for design and location. If, however, you wish to design one yourself, there are a number of possibilities that will blend with the garden scheme without emphasizing its utilitarian purpose.

Prowlers Are Wary Of Lighted Grounds

The proper illumination of the outside of a house at night can take the place of a watchdog and a handshake. That statement may sound like a riddle but it is quite true.

Nothing seems quite so welcoming to the guest searching for a strange house as the street number and entrance lighted for identification. And prowlers are not likely to lurk around the home when the grounds are lighted.

Removing Gingerbread.

Some of the ugly-duckling houses that were built during the Dark Ages of the last century can be made quite presentable by stripping them of their gingerbread and unnecessary projecting bays and retaining the simple straightforward lines.

Rebuilt Houses Now in Style Of Ancestors

Combined Living-Dining Room Is Universal Feature of Dwellings.

If a woman will save her clothes for seven years, they will come back into style, according to the old adage. And in much the same fashion are houses reverting to the style of our great-grandparents, albeit with modern appliances.

Many rambling old houses had at least some of the bedrooms on the first floor and in small houses and country places this is again the case. Of course, the bungalow has always been popular among suburban residents, but the two-story house today is frequently arranged so that the family can live on one floor if it so desires.

One family, in remodeling a house, decided to turn the dining room into an extra bedroom and combine the living room and den into a large combination living-dining room. This story concerns itself with the newly created bedroom. A wainscoting which reached to the window sills was painted white, as it had been in the original dining room. A closet, which had held shelves for dishes and linen, was made into a clothes closet. The door to the room led from the hall, fortunately, and did not have to be changed.

The walls were covered with wallpaper—an American copy of a well-known English design. The suspended ceiling light, the dining room standby of a few years back, was replaced by a small bedroom fixture. Powerful bulbs were used so that the room could be brightly lighted if the occupant wanted to be sure of her evening makeup.

With the background of the room complete, the housewife furnished it with her own funds. Because the wallpaper had vivid coloring, furnishings and accessories were kept in neutral shades. The four-poster bed, night table, dressing table and bench, chest of drawers and two small chairs were of mahogany. The carpet and draperies were a gray-green, and a barrel chair, placed by the window for reading or sewing, was a gray and green velour. The mahogany chairs had seats of gray.

The four-poster bed had a skirted spread of white dimity and the lamps and glass curtains were also white. No pictures were used on the walls.

Lansburgh & Bro. Is Air-Conditioned

Beginning tomorrow, Lansburgh & Bros.' department store will be air-conditioned. Tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock, Ralph Goldsmith, secretary of the firm, will throw the switch setting in operation the modern air-conditioning plant, which has been designed and constructed specially to fit the ventilation requirements on four full floors of the store.

Mr. Goldsmith expressed pride regarding the air-conditioning unit which General Electric has installed in the store, explaining it was specially arranged and built for the establishment. He said that last year, the General Electric Corporation sent engineers to this city to study local weather conditions and the interior atmospheric conditions in the various departments of the store.

A blueprint of every floor in the store was made and over a period of time an accurate record was kept to determine the exact conditions in every location of the building. On the basis of these findings, the Lansburgh unit was built to conform with the individual variations of the different departments.

Air-Conditioning Hailed as 'Basic'

C. Kramer Johnston, recently appointed manager of the Washington branch of Standard Air Conditioning, Inc., a division of American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corporation, in an interview stated that remarkable acceptance by the public of air conditioning indicates the industry is rapidly becoming one of the fastest moving basic ones in the United States.

JOHNSTON.

Mr. Johnston estimates that in Washington, D. C. alone there will be installed this year, air conditioning equipment well over $5,000,000 for private individuals and firms. This is in addition to the millions of dollars which the Government has planned in air conditioning Federal department buildings.

Another indication of the interest in the air conditioning field is the number of individual portable room conditioners which are being installed in private offices and homes of Washington.

Automotive News

Plans for a $500,000 expansion of the Ford assembly plant at Norfolk, Va., which supplies automobiles to the Washington territory, have been announced. This expansion will permit an increase of car production capacity to 400 per day. It will also provide facilities for handling parts and other material shipped direct from the Ford plant in Detroit via the water route of Great Lakes, New York State Barge Canal, Hudson River and Atlantic Coastal waters.

At the present time the Norfolk plant has no facilities for receiving or dispatching shipments by water. All cars and trucks now manufactured there have to be sent 10 miles over land to the Norfolk Army Supply Base, where they are loaded on boats. When the new dock is completed, built-up units can be loaded directly for water shipment at the plant, which lies some 7 miles up the Elizabeth River. This addition should be of great benefit to the Washington area for while it now gets many of its cars from Norfolk, some still come from Chester, Pa. Under the new arrangement, it is most likely that all cars will come from the Virginia city.

Sales Contest Launched.

At a luncheon meeting held last Tuesday at the Mayflower Hotel, the Pontiac Jamboree Sales Contest for July and August got off to a fine start when it was enthusiastically received by the 250 dealers and salesmen present. James Johnson, zone manager who was in charge of the meeting, promised a party and prizes to the lucky ones early in September when the final results are compiled. This contest differs from most that have been held in the past in that the participants are given scrip instead of points for making quotas. This scrip will be redeemable on the day of the "Jamboree" in payment for prizes which will be offered to the highest bidders.

Cary Gets Post.

W. E. Holler, general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor Co., has announced the appointment of L. M. Cary as zone manager for the Washington-Baltimore area. Mr. Cary is well known to the Washington automobile fraternity, having at one time been city sales manager here for Chevrolet. He comes to this territory from Harrisburg, Pa., where he has been zone manager for the past four years.

Safety Film Prepared.

"Follow the White Marker" is the subject of a new one-reel "silent" safety educational motion picture film prepared under the supervision of the United States Bureau of Mines, Department of the Interior, in co-operation with a large manufacturer of cement for the purpose of furthering the cause of safety on the highways.

In the preparation of this film the lesson of safe driving on the right side of the white cement markers on our highways is illustrated.

Careless driving and resulting accidents are picturized and scenes, have been taken in various large cities showing the utilization of the white marker in regulating traffic.

Copies of this film in 16-mm. or 35-mm. sizes are loaned for exhibition purposes, to schools, churches, clubs, civic and business organizations, and others, upon application to the Bureau of Mines Experiment Station, Pittsburgh, Pa. No charge is made for the use of the films, but the exhibitor is asked to pay transportation charges.

Large Basements Greatest Desire

A full-sized basement was the feature most desired by 84 per cent of 250,000 home owners questioned in a poll conducted by a building magazine to determine the likes and dislikes of the modern home-buyer.

Eighty-three per cent of the owners questioned said they preferred separate living and dining rooms and 82 per cent voted for a laundry room. Air conditioning was a desired feature of 65 per cent. A place for the storage of fruits and vegetables was a feature desired by 55 per cent of the owners. Fifty-four per cent of the voters asked for two or more baths, while an attached garage and a basement recreation room were each listed as a desirable feature by 51 per cent. Exactly half of the owners polled voted for thermostatic control of the heating plant.

Sewing Room Useful To Every Housewife

We generally think of built-in ironing boards as belonging in the kitchen. The housewife who enjoys sewing, however, will find a room specially planned for this purpose a great joy.

A sewing room can accommodate the occasional guest, too, and be doubly useful. For sewing purposes the room should be equipped with a machine, full length mirror, closets for storing materials and accessories, space for hanging unfinished garments, ironing board, large table for laying and cutting of patterns and a comfortable work chair.

New Paint Helps To Brighten Room

A coat of fresh paint will work wonders in brightening up a room, particularly the kitchen, if the walls are drab and dull. The room exposure should determine the color choice. If the kitchen is sunny, blue or green walls are good, but in a room facing north the soft cream yellows will supply the lack of sunlight.

Adapted to kitchen use and exceedingly attractive for its walls is a gloss paint in pale apricot color. To set off this shade, white, silver, or gray may be used, and if curtains are hung in the room a blue-green fabric edged with a deeper tone of apricot than the walls will be most effective.

A small amount of the blue-green may be used to advantage in touching up kitchen cabinets or other furniture. Painting inside the table drawers or other containers for kitchen equipment in apricot carries out the color scheme.

Balance Held Factor In Hanging of Pictures

There are as many schools on the subject of hanging pictures as there are on the matter of the proper way to make a mint julep. Some say they should step, while others favor block formation. Some say they should hang in pairs and there are those who claim that one picture should not be placed close enough to detract attention from another.

The theory of hanging them so that the eye strikes the middle of the picture as you stand in front of it is a time-worn tradition, but of course, this varies with the person who hangs the picture. The important thing to keep in mind in the hanging of wall decorations is balance.

Basement Lighting.

With the current fashion of making an extra room in the basement the problem of how to make cellar windows attractive becomes important. The lack of sunlight caused by the small square window that most basements boast usually makes a drab room.

Martha Washington Shop to Be Opened

A third Martha Washington Shop in this city will open at 6239 Georgia avenue at the corner of Sheridan street. Parking space and curb service will be provided for its customers.

Martha Washington candies were originated here more than 40 years ago by the late Ellie Sheetz. The original shop is located at 507 Twelfth street northwest. The first combination ice cream and candy shop to be opened in Washington is at 3507 Connecticut avenue.

Setting Winding Steps.

In a stair that turns a corner, winding steps are perfectly easy and safe if only two are set in a 90-degree turn. Such steps allow ample foot space where one normally steps. To divide this 90 degrees into three steps makes unsafe footing.

Mayoralty Vote Set Tomorrow At Annapolis

'May Best Man Win,' Says Phipps; Mrs. Clements Ends Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., July 10.—Annapolis' first campaign for mayor with a woman as one of the candidates ended tonight with last-minute pleas from the two office-seekers. The election is Monday.

Mayor Louis N. Phipps, Democratic incumbent, said:

"Let the best man win; that has always been the sentiment in mayoralty campaigns in Annapolis."

Mrs. Mildred M. Clements, Republican nominee, said:

"Well, I tell you. I have several pairs of my husband's socks to darn and I'm going to do that tonight. When that's done, I'll be caught up and ready to take over the mayoralty. I'd revise Mayor Phipps' remark to read 'Let the best candidate win.'"

The full tickets are:

Damon, Pythias Story Unfolded In Bonus Fraud

Elkins, W. Va., July 10 (AP).—Coal Miner John Zlotinoff withdrew the mystery today from a real life drama of Damon and Ppthias in which one bortehr went to war for another.

Zlotinoff of the coal pits about Cassville pleaded guilty to attempting to borrow money on the bonus certificates of his dead brother, Sam.

Assistant United States Attorney Bantz Chaddock then told the story. In substance it unfolded thus:

John and Sam immigrated from Russia. Then the war, and John was notified to appear before the selective service board.

He paid his brother $400 to go in his place.

They exchanged names; Sam said he was John and went to France. He fought bravely, winning the American Distinguished Service medal and two French citations.

At home later John later received a notice from Washington addressed to Sam. It ordered him to an Army camp.

The real Sam came back to Cassvoille unharmed by the war.

Crutchfield Will Leaves $104,410

Richmond, Va., July 10 (AP).—The will of the late E. Mulford Crutchfield, bequeathing all of an estate valued at $104,410 to his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Patterson Crutchfield, was probated today in Henrico County Circuit Court. The will was dated September 30, 1932.

Personal property in the estate was valued at $104,210 and realty $200.

Crutchfield, general agent of Virginia for the Equitable Life Assurance Society, was shot to death at his home, "Reveille" in Henrico County July 3.

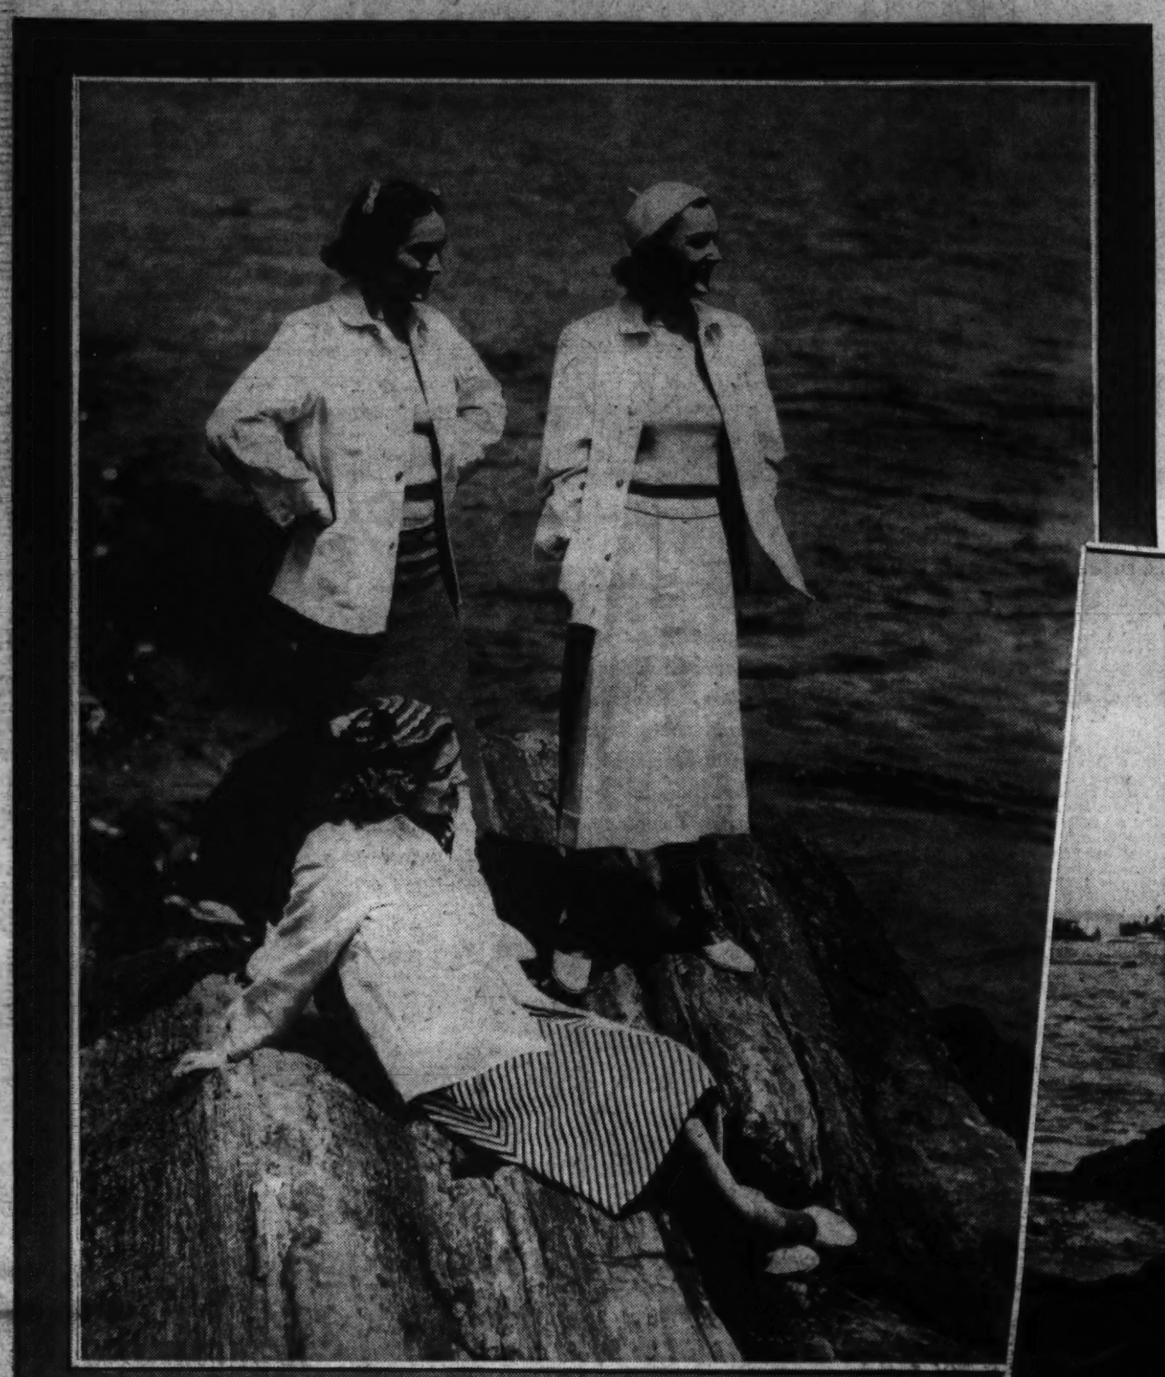
New England Resorts Draw Thousands From All Parts of Nation



THE OLD SEAPORTS of New England are busy with the commerce of the present and the past. Along the wharves stand trim stone warehouses, where tea and spice from the Orient lay after trips in the mighty clippers. In some of the harbors are tankers of the present, fresh from a trip to Mexico, Rangoon, Singapore or Rio. There, too, may be coastal lumber boats, still powered by sail; luxury liners steaming down the bay for Europe, and perhaps a whaler just as it sailed in from its last trip.

Inlanders Fascinated By Variety of Ocean

The salt tang of the Atlantic can be smelled half way across the continent, apparently, for it attracts hundreds of thousands of people to New England every summer.

Some of them go back to check up on the stories their great-uncles told about the whaling ports. Some of them go to learn the surprising difference there is between fresh water bathing and salt. Some of them just want to see an ocean liner pulling out from its dock.

The maritime quality of New Englandis one of the most appealing of all its recreational resources, says the New England Council. There is some magic about the sea itself and its historic part in American life. The mysteries of the tides are one thing. In a space of six hours the sea will change from its full tide, lapping high up on the beaches and among the rocks, to the lowest ebb, exposing the glistening plant growths on the rocks and leaving broad wet reaches of sand, teeming with marine life. There will be a difference of anywhere from 7 to 20 feet in the depth of the water, a phenomenon that never fails to intrigue visitors from inland.

Endless Variety of Sea.

Then the varying aspects which the sea puts on have their own magic. Sunrise and sunset, the typical sunny day with the long, cool combers rolling in from the sharp line of the cloud-banked horizon to smash in a smother of green and white on the shore. Then a day when the sky is of wet gray wool and a mighty wind piles up a black sea into snow-capped mountains of hurrying water. You learn what excitement can be then. On another day perhaps a white, silent fog will sheathe the world. Wherever you stand you can see but a few feet right around you. But you hear all the noises of the sea—the boom of the surf, the eerie clank of a bell buoy out by the reef, the blat and whistle of boats feeling their way.

Mostly you will spend whole days sitting, walking, sleeping on the sand, soaking up the warm sun, cooling off with frequent plunges in the clear green water. You will discover what food can taste like, and how important it can be, when you have been breathing spicy air from off the ocean for an hour or two. The same sea that gives you the appetite gives you the food to satisfy it—fish caught that morning out in front of your hotel, broiled live lobster sizzling in melted butter, a steaming heap of tasty clams, tender, sweet scallops.

Old Ports Fascinate.

The old seaports will engage you, with their quiet, nostalgic flavor of the past. Salem and Portsmouth and Wiscasset, Gloucester, New Bedford, New London. There will you see the trim stone warehouses where the teas and spices and fabrics of the Orient once lay after their long, fast trips in the mighty clippers. You will see fine white mansions, built out of shipping fortunes, topped by a "widow's walk" where families anxiously watched each day for a sign of the towering canvas of a homecoming ship. You will see the long piers, of stout timber and granite, where outgoing cargoes of rum and tobacco and Yankee-made machinery and implements were piled, with 40 feet of clear water alongside.

You will find in museum's fine paintings of famous ships, wheels and bells and spars from them, log books of great voyages, the harpoons and lances and knives of the whaler, finely wrought models of ships, skilfully carved "scrimshaw" work on walrus tusks and whale bone. In one place you will see a whaler itself, the Charles W. Morgan, preserved for all time just as it returned from its last voyage.

But in some of these ports and in others you will see that maritime life in New England is not all of the past. In some of the harbors you will see tankers up from Mexico, freighters in from Rangoon, Singapore, Rio, West Africa, China; luxury liners steaming majestically down the bay for Europe and the tropics. You will even see sail still in use for the coastal lumber boats. Grain elevators rear their clean white sides; rumbling coal tipples bustle uncannily about their work; crated automobiles are swung high in the air by the long cargo booms. Then you will want to be alongside for that moment when the tugs come alongside, first one and then another mooring line is snaked in, and there begins to appear a thin silver of open water. The boat is sailing. When next its engines are stilled its passengers will be looking across at a sparkling tropical village or at the great docks of a European port.

Coast Guard, Navy Boats.

Often in the harbor you will see a small gray boat zooming swiftly by, or a great seaplane roaring overhead. It's the Coast Guard, keeping its watch for imperiled lives and for law-breakers. Slipping quietly out to sea will be a battle cruiser, a destroyer, a submarine of the Navy. Thousands of white sails will enthrall you as their skippers loaf about the bays or engage in tight races.

Out in a rocky headland you will be able to drive right up to a tall gleaming light house. Step inside and see what a science tidiness can be. Metal and glass twinkle immaculately, "ship shape." Floors and walls and the winding staircase up the tower are orderly and spotless. Up top great lenses and powerful lights stand ready for their all-night vigil of warning to mariners. Below you stretch the brown rocks and then the broad carpet of a sparkling sea. But you will hear about times when winter seas have sprayed the lofty floor you stand on and when anxious watchers saw distressed vessels fight their way from the reefs.

THERE is always something to watch along the shores of New England. It may be a ship under sail; a race, with thousands of white sails dotting the sea, or a liner outward bound.

SOMEWHERE in every New England scene there is a mountain, and often more than one. Tree-covered slopes form a permanent backdrop for peaceful country scenes and are mirrored in the lakes below. Motor roads follow the contours of the valleys and rise to high, outcropping shoulders. On every hand there is a breath-taking view.

New Short Travel Schedule Attracts Tourists to Alaska

Territory, Once Known as 'Seward's Folly,' Now Is Mecca for Summer Vacationers; Round Trip From Capital Takes 19 Days.

It is a strange thing that Alaska was neglected for so long by the American public. It was considered to be so far away and of so little use that in 1867, when Secretary Seward bought the territory from the Russian government for $7,000,000 the purchase was scoffed at by the nation and for many years thereafter was popularly referred to as "Seward's Folly." For a full 30 years after the date of purchase, Alaska was practically a forgotten land. It was not until 1897 when gold was discovered in the territory that public interest was stimulated.

The years 1897-99, now known as "The Klondike Rush" or "The Trail of '98" saw thousands of men pour into Alaska and the Yukon is one of the most frenzied gold stampedes in the history of the world. Back from "Seward's Folly" there began to pour streams of fabulous riches, stories of epic adventure and tales of a country of magnificent scenery. The public imagination was stirred and it has remained awake to the potentialities of Alaska ever since.

Historic Trails.

While gold mining still is carried on in Alaska on such an extensive scale that its annual production more than doubles the sum which Seward originally paid for the whole 586,000 square miles which constitute Alaska, its lure is no longer as strong to the gold prospector as to the men and women who find mental exhilaration in retracing trails of history and exploration and enrichment of the body in exotic surroundings. In some such explanation, no doubt, lies the reason for the ever-growing, widespread interest which summer vacationists are showing in Alaska. There is no spot in North America which seems to exert a stronger influence upon the traveling public or toward which as many inquiries are directed as Alaska.

Alaska certainly has the elements to satisfy such desires. Its rugged seacoast, where the great mountain ranges slope swiftly into the sea; its tremendous glaciers, which return their rivers of ice to the mother of waters; its lakes, which shimmer like opals and bits of jade under the summer sun; its deep forests and tumbling rivers piece together a picture of almost incomparable beauty. And interwoven with the colored pattern which nature has woven so lavishly upon so broad a loom are the still colorful remnants of the old Russian regime and of the daring men and women who faced almost unbelievable hardships and danger in the great gold rush of the closing days of the nineteenth century.

Nor is it necessary any longer to consider Alaska far away. By a unique combination of train and boat schedules, the Canadian National Railways have made it possible this year for a tourist to go from Washington to Skagway, Alaska, and back in 19 days. By this arrangement of time tables the "land of the midnight sun" has been brought within the reach of the tourist who has less than three weeks to devote to a vacation.

Long before Alaska is reached the sense of its beauty and vastness is felt by the traveler. The sea voyage from Vancouver, B. C., northward follows the route of the inside passage, a protected waterway lying between the mainland and offshore islands. On both sides of the ship great mountains, many of them snow-capped, loom against the sky, and for the full thousand miles along which the ship follows its northward course the scenery is comparable only to that of a Norwegian fjord. By many it is considered superior.

Skagway Interesting.

Juneau, the capital of Alaska; Wrangell, Ketchikan and Skagway are among the Alaskan ports at which calls are made. Each has something new of interest to offer, but Skagway has the most of all.

This picturesque community nestling in the lee of the Chilkoot Mountains, at the head of a long arm of the sea known as the Lynn Canal, is the gateway to the famous Klondike of '98. Here there survive many evidences of that heroic struggle between man and nature for the possession of riches.

Almost on the doorsten of Skagway begins the Chilkoot Pass, over which, in the dead of winter of 1898, thousands of men toiled in a never-ending procession toward the gold fields. Beyond that pass, at the head of Lake Bennett, just across the Yukon boundary, began the Whitehorse Pass, which was even more fearsome than the Chilkoot.

Here, in the terrific effort to scale the mountains over which this pass led, more than 3,000 pack horses lost their lives. At the top of the pass a monument has been erected to these gallant beasts by the Daughters of the Alaska-Yukon Pioneers.

Canadian Rockies Enter Upon Second Half-Century of Railway Travel This Summer

Banff-Lake Louise Area, Set Aside as Park, Now Includes 4,000 Square Miles; Has Vigor of American West.

With the present summer the Canadian Rockies enter upon their second half century of railway travel. When, on the 4th of July, 1886, the first Canadian Pacific Railway train rolled into its then Pacific terminus of Port Moody after a 5½-day run from Montreal, Canada started its period of most rapid growth as a dominion. The 51 years that followed have brought many changes, but so far as the visitor is concerned the mountain area has since remained intact and unspoiled. For with the completion of this pioneer railway, the Banff-Lake Louise area was reserved by the government as a park, making Banff Park Canada's first national playground. Beginning as a modest preserve of 10 square miles, Banff Park grew through successive enlargements to its present area of almost 4,000 square miles. Its many summer activities have long made Banff the capital not only of the Canadian Rockies but of the westernmost quarter of Canada. And within recent years the growth of interest in skiing has made Banff a winter capital as well. The amateur group known as the Ski Runners of the Canadian Rockies deserves the credit for this distinction, and for making Banff last March the scene of the dominion ski championship.

The Canadian West, like the American West, has vigor and friendliness—a joint heritage of pioneer stock. Vigor spurs the Western Canadians to plan summer attractoins, and neighborliness makes them invite Americans up from across the border. The recent visit of Lord and Lady Tweedsmuir to the White House will be returned by thousands of the President's fellow citizens, and in much the same spirit of good will.

Cowboy Spectacle Planned.

A spectacle of the cowboy life shared in common by both countries opens in Calgary July 5 and runs through July 10. Here, in the foothills of the Rockies, is staged the annual exhibition and stampede, a lively panorama in rodeo form of the more robust kinds of sport and amusement surviving from pioneer days. These range frolics and cowboy high-jinks, by their very survival, prove that the salt and iron are still in the blood of the Westerner. In these five days, alongside the quiet exhibits of farm products and prize cattle and horses, the frontier spirit of the West is on parade, with cowhands, bronco busters, oil prospectors, ranchers and an occasional old-time gambler taking their due places in the show. The stampede has all the familiar rodeo contests, with entries from Canada, the States, Australia and the Argentine, as well as the time-honored carnival and side-show features. Encamped on the stampede grounds are the Stoney Indians from the nearby Morley reserve, who come down in their family wagons or in shiny motor cars to play their alternating roles as spectators or participants. The numerous papooses, like the many braves, squaws and elder chiefs, early acquire the gift of silence. No amount of shouting from the stampede arena seems to shake those infants out of their stolidity. They continue to baffle the paleface child by their aloof but not unfriendly unconcern.

Banff Fetes Indian Days.

Still, there comes a brief time when the papoose and his elder achieve almost a semblance of excitement—and that is at the Banff Indian days, which this year last from July 23 to 25, inclusive. In this sense the Calgary stampede's rodeo-circus may be said to be a kind of warming-up for the smaller but more intense Indian days festival, which the Stoneys have been staging at Banff for over 40 years past. The three days are devoted to reviving their tribal customs, ceremonies and amusements. Some 500 Stoney chiefs and braves with their squaws and papooses trek the 40 miles up to Banff by motor, on horseback, by buckboard, wagon or even with their primitive travois, bringing along their camping gear. At Buffalo Park, in Banff, under the eye of Chief Jacob Two Young Men, they set up their 100-odd teepees, which at night convert the Bow River Valley into something of its character before the white man's coming. In the daytime the Indians work earnestly at their horse races, broncho busting, archery contests, squaw races, equestrian tugs of war, and wrestling on horseback. In the evening a number of picked choirs assemble on the elk pasture near the Banff Springs Hotel and perform the solo and concerted music and dances of their ancestors. Sometimes a troop of friendly Chinequay Indians accept the Stoneys' invitation and join them for an evening of outdoor singing and dancing.

'Forty Niner' Train Starts Pacific Run

Streamlined Express Will Have San Francisco-Chicago Route.

Inauguration of the "Forty Niner," fast all-Pullman train of streamline design, on the San Francisco-Chicago run was made Thursday from Chicago and today from San Francisco. The new train, jointly operated by the Chicago & North Western, Union Pacific and Southern Pacific railroads, will make five round trips a month. Its schedule is to be staggered with that of the streamliner "City of San Francisco" to provide deluxe extra-fare service every three days.

Consisting of eight cars, all air-conditioned, the "Forty Niner" has accommodations for 117 passengers. It was powered by high-speed steam locomotives. The running time between the terminals is 49 hours eastbound and 50 hours and 42 minutes westbound.

The "Forty Niner's" equipment is featured by a new type two-car articulated unit carried at the rear of the train. The head car of this unit is of duplex construction with seven bedrooms upstairs and nine downstairs. The beds, forming sofas by day, are crosswise rather than parallel with the sides of the cars. A commodious observation lounge section, buffet and rooms, all on the same level, are included in the rear car of the unit.

Another feature of the train is the full-length dining car, equipped with round tables, including a lonnge at one end. Table linen, glass and silverware have been especially designed for the train. The kitchen is in the adjoining car ahead of the diner.

In keeping with the name "Forty Niner," the cars of the train have been chistened "Donner Lake," "Angel's Camp," "Gold Run," "James Marshall," "Captain John Sutter," "Joaquin Miller," "Bear Flag" and "California Republic," all names intimately associated with California history of the 1849 period.

Santa Fe Trains Carry Travelers To Indian Lands

Summer travelers are finding the reduced transcontinental fares an incentive to visit the Grand Canyon of Arizona, and the Indian Detours, reached by the Santa Fe Railway fast through trains, according to G. C. Dillard, district passenger agent of the Santa Fe in Philadelphia. Round-trip first-class, intermediate and coach tickets provide for the passenger's return through the Pacific Northwest if it is so desired.

All of the Santa Fe's principal trains are fully air-conditioned in the interest of cleanliness as well as for the maintenance of an even temperature. The Super Chief stainless-steel streamliner, which departs from Chicago weekly, powered by the Diesel electric units of 1,800 horsepower each, makes the run Chicago to Los Angeles in 39 hours and 40 minutes.

Other Santa Fe trains include the Chief and the California Limited, carrying standard sleeping car passengers only; the Grand Canyon Limited and the Navajo carrying both standard and tourist sleepers and free reclining chair cars for coach passengers, and the fast Scout carrying tourist sleepers, free reclining chair cars with coach nurses in attendance, and dining car serving low-priced table d'hote meals or a la carte if desired. For chair car passengers free pillows and drinking cups are provided.

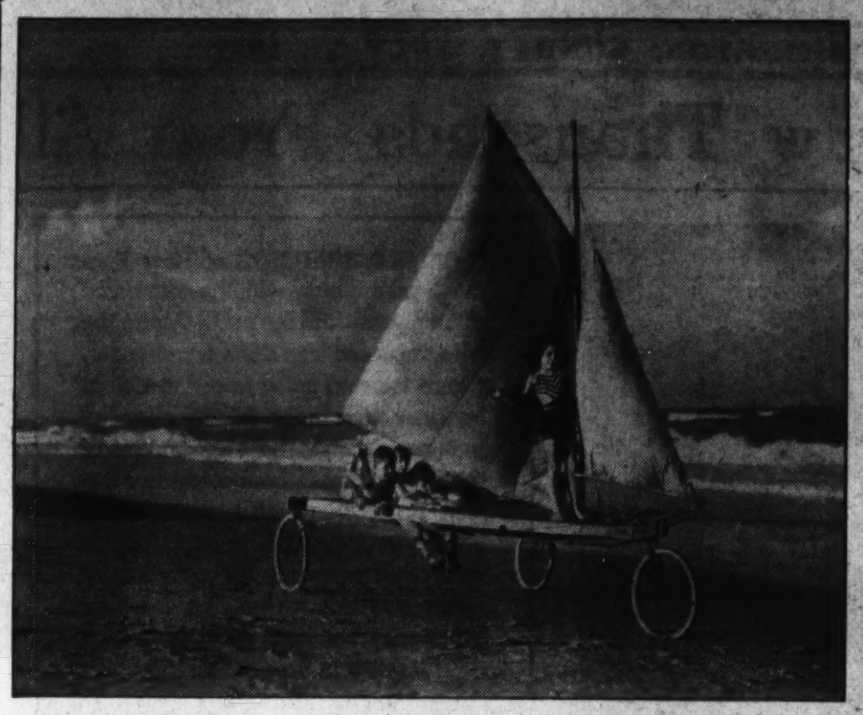
One, two and three-day Indian Detours, reached by the Santa Fe via Lamy, N. Mex., are very popular. These detours feature a most distinctive motor cruise service, wherein thousands find their first delightful introduction to the lure of the far Southwest. Guests for the several Indian Detours stay overnight at La Fonda Hotel, Santa Fe, N. Mex., and find in the auto trips over Northern New Mexico's Roads to Yesterday the relaxation that comes of sparkling mountain air and sunshine, and a world different.

Veendam Plans 13-Day Cruise

Trips of Holland-America Line to Commence on August 7.

The steamship Veendam will open the summer and fall cruise program of ten trips arranged by the Holland-America Line with a 13-day voyage to Gaspe and Quebec and Bermuda on August 7, to be followed by her sister ship, the Volendam, on August 31, on a Labor Day trip to Gaspe and Nova Scotia, of six days. The balance of the schedule will be ably performed by the famous Rotterdam upon her return from her annual 45-day North Cape cruise on which she departed on June 29.

The Rotterdam's sailings will be August 21, 12 days to Gaspe, Quebec and Bermuda; September 3, five-day Labor Day cruise to Bermuda; September 8, a cruise also of five days to Bermuda; September 18, 13 days to St. Thomas, St. Pierre, Fort-de-France, La Guayra and Curacao; October 2, a similar, Columbus Day, voyage to the same ports; October 16 to Fort-au-Prince, Kingston, Havana and Nassau, of 13 days; October 30, election day cruise to Nassau and Havana, nine days, and Armistice Day, nine-day cruise also to Nassau and Havana.



"A Sailing We Will Go"!—But it's on the beach, not the water, that these Washington youngsters are doing their sailing in their novel Sail-o-mobile. In the picture, snapped at Virginia Beach, where Sail-o-mobiling is being presented as an ideal fall sport, are Marjorie Ford, Richard Hildreth, Tommy Ford and David Hildreth.

Jasper Lodge Is Now Ready For Big Season

Jasper Park Lodge, Alta.—With the unfurling of the large Union Jack under a bright summer sun, Jasper Park Lodge, internationally known mountain summer resort in the Canadian Rockies, officially opened for the season. The grounds are weeks ahead of their usual time and the golf course is in superb condition. Manager Robert Sommerville is of the opinion that this will be one of the heaviest years Jasper has ever had, as the present reservations indicate a steady stream of guests throughout the summer. Among recent arrivals here were a large party of the California Press Association, which will hold a three-day convention here before returning to the coast via Prince Rupert.

Throughout the season the guests will have an excellent musical program, as the well-known orchestra conducted by Joe Decourcey has been engaged. This ten-piece orchestra will also be heard on the air during the summer season.

Fishing promises to be a popular pastime, and already several good catches of speckled trout have been made at Beaver and Medicine Lakes. The chef had a busy time cooking the tasty members of the finny tribe for guests who arrived a day in advance of the opening.

Air Travel Mark Reached in June

Marking another significant step in the development of air travel in the United States, American Airlines, Inc., today announced a total of 30,902 revenue passengers for the month of June—the first time any airline has attained the 30,000-passenger mark in a single month and a new all-time record for the airline industry.

The announcement by C. R. Smith, president of the company, pointed out that this figure represents an average of more than 1,000 passengers per day for the entire month and indicates a gain of 7.5 per cent over the 28,757 passengers carried by Americans in October, 1936, previous record month for the industry.

Fishing and Hiking In the Catskills

Fishermen and hikers will find an ideal vacatoin spot in New York's Catskill Mountains. Those who enjoy walking and camping in the open air have a choice of twelve major trails leading into all parts of the beautiful hilly region.

There are many free public camping grounds, where the hikers may stop to rest and enjoy broiling a steak over an open fireplace. Trout abound in the numerous tiny streams throughout the Catskills and make these mountains a popular vecationland for fishermen.

Jersey Resort Offers Fishing

Golf at Wildwood, N. J., Also Attracts Many Vacationists.

Wildwood, N. J.—Sports are playing a bigger part than ever in the summer holiday of the average vacationists, according to a report compiled here by the Chamber of Commerce.

Fishing, apparently, has a more definite lure to visitors than any of the other sports, with anglers matching their skill against the fish from the beach, the fishing piers and the deep-sea fishing boats which go to sea daily.

Big catches are being made by all three types of anglers, with the deep-sea boats reporting the greatest. Many of the boats make the run to the Wildwood Fish Sanctuary each morning. The sanctuary is a protected area on the bottom of the ocean where the fish have an opportunity to feed and spawn without interference from the commercial fishermen. It is the first salt water fish sanctuary in the world. Many women are ardent anglers.

Golf continues to hold the interest of many sportsmen. The 18-hole course of the Wildwood Golf Club is only eight minutes' ride by automobile from the central business sections and offers an interesting test of golf for both dub and expert.

The Vanishing Rickshaw.

The rickshaw, the man-drawn means of conveyance which formerly ranked with geisha, cherry blossoms, and Japanese meals eaten squatting on the floor among the exotic attractions, is rapidly vanishing.

The same tendency is also noticeable in the provincial towns, although some old-fashioned Japanese inns still maintain their staffs of rickshaw-pullers, who bid for customers by the picturesque light of lanterns when the train arrives in a town at night.

India's Population Over 350,000,000

India accounts for more than two-thirds of the population of the British Empire. It has nearly three times as many people as the United States, although its area is only a little more than half as large.

But the 351,399,000 Indians crowded into the triangular peninsula that juts out from the bottom of Asia are far from unified, culturally, religiously or politically. India is a veritable crazy quilt of presidencies, native states, provinces, protectorates, tribal areas and even a few foreign-owned patches. Some parts have been governed by modern British law, others by native princes ruling with Arabian Nights splendor, holding power of life and death over their minions, maintaining their own armies and subject indirectly to the British king-emperor. France and Portugal still keep tiny toeholds on the edges of the huge British domain.

Marlin, Blues Are Plentiful at Atlantic City

Fishing Bank Offshore Draws Hundreds of Anglers.

Atlantic City.—Marlin, tuna and blues are running in these waters and visiting fishermen from all sections of the East are coming here to participate in the sport.

The fleet of speedy boats at the Atlantic City Tuna Club is making trips out to the ridge each day and returning with good catches. The boats and the facilities of the club are open to the general public and complete equipmnet is provided so that all the sportsman needs is a desire to fish and a little patience.

Meanwhile a few hundred additional tons of paving blocks are being dumped at the Atlantic City fishing bank 12 miles offshore.

Spawning Ground.

This bank was started last year by the Chamber of Commerce and barge loads of junk were towed out to sea and dumped to provide a foundation for marine growth, a spawning ground for the fish.

The fish around the bank are biting even better this year than last and the skippers of the party boats at the Inlet Yachting Center will practically guarantee fish for those who prefer this type of the sport. Weakies, kings and croakers are particularly plentiful.

These are also being caught in great numbers in the back bays while the pier and surf fishermen are also going home each day with full baskets.

Inlet Channel Finished.

The completed dredging of the inlet channel to a new depth of 22 feet has attracted more boatsmen to this port than at any time in the past eight years. Small craft of all kinds ply the waters of the back bays almost continuously while the big yachts anchor at the municipal docks as their owners enjoy the resort's many entertainment facilities.

The full quota of the Atlantic City Beach Patrol are on duty as the resort becomes the Mecca for those seeking a combination of sand, surf and sunshine. Stretched out along the eight miles of beach each day can be seen thousands of sun and ocean bathers getting their rest and recreation in the modern manner.

Swiss Peasants Provide Sport For Travelers

There is an old and very true saying that all work and no play make Jack a dull boy, and life in the high Alpine regions, in spite of the pageant of scenic beauty all around, would be liable to become monotonous were it not for the happy interludes which the peasants create for themselves with their sports and pastimes.

Wrestling, stone heaving and throwing, also hornussen, are sports characteristic of Swiss dairyland, and their cultivation is a matter of pride with old and young.

Wrestling, with its possibilities for a limited participation of two, is a particular favorite and often, in some remote pastoral realm, two dairymen will decide to match their strength and skill in this sport after the day's work is done.

Wrestling contests graduate from local events to cantonal and finally to national fetes, and no summer Alpine festival would be complete without its bouts in this sturdy sport.

Stone heaving and throwing is also a favorite game. In this instance the competitors have to demonstrate who can throw a stone of officially determined weight the farthest.

Quite an unusual sport, especially in vogue among the Bernese peasants, is hornussen. It combines features common to golf, cricket, tennis and baseball, and is played by two opposing teams, the "strikers" and the "killers," each 22 men strong. The strikers, equipped with very whippy ashen clubs 8 feet long, drive the "hornet" from a metal tee as far as possible down a marked course. The killers are placed in strategic positions along the course, and are armed with huge wooden racquets, with which they ward off the disc as it comes hurtling through the air. Each striker may have three drives. If he can land the hornet into the course untouched, the defending team has a point marked against it, but if the disc is intercepted, the killers gain a point. At half-time defenders and attackers change sides. Three umpires officiate for each team.

An Exciting Game.

The game is exciting and spectacular. As the disc shoots from the tee like a bullet, cat-like agility and the swiftest vision are needed by the fieldsmen, not only to avoid danger, but to "kill" the hornet with their racquets. Same as wrestling, contests in hornussen are an important feature of rural festivals in the Alps, and at regular intervals they also are offered on a large scale as federal events.

Typically Swiss is the pastime of "Fahnenschwingen," swinging of flags, which consists of the artistic manipulation of a large flag mounted on a short handle. To the strains of a band, the player unfurls his flag, waves it around his head, enveloping himself in the folds, without ever allowing it to become entangled. He tosses it into the air with one hand and catches it with the other; he passes it under one of his legs, then under the other, backward and forward, yet never letting it touch the ground.

Most alluring and poetic among pastimes in the Swiss Alps is Alphorn playing, and no pastoral fete would be complete without this sweet music. The alphorn dates back to the ninth century. It is a 9-10 feet long instrument, fashioned from native fir, and for protection against dampness or damage it is covered in its entirety by a thin layer of oakwood chips or birch-rind. An alphorn can only produce the natural tones and belongs, therefore, out of doors. Up in the lofty pastoral realms its affords the dairymen a means to commune with a far-off neighbor after the day's work is done.

MacJannet Campers in France Have Own 'League of Nations'

Boys and Girls of 16 Nations Mingle Happily at International Center on Lac d'Annecy in the Majestic Alps.

By Robert S. Cramer.

Not far from Geneva, home of the League of Nations, there is another "League of Nations" which really works—the MacJannet Camps for boys and girls. This "league" substitutes baseball bats and balls for rifles and bullets, and the results obtained are remarkably similar to those sought, but never accomplished by the Geneva league.

In 1923 Donald R. MacJannet, a former instructor at National Cathedral School, conceived the idea of a summer camp for European children such as we have in America. At "The Elms," a school he founded in Paris for instruction of American students preparing for college board examinations, MacJannet, an understanding Scotch-Yankee, formulated plans for his proposed camp. After an exhaustive search for a site, he finally chose Talloires on Lac d'Annecy in the snow-capped, majestic French Alps. Here his camp flourished, a camp vastly different from others because of its international scope and character.

"Le Camp Americain," as the native French call it, developed rapidly. Last year boys and girls of 16 nationalities attended. Germans, Italians, English, French, Japanese, Americans, all formed one big, happy family. A quaint spectacle is afforded the visitor to this camp. He might see a French boy perplexingly scratching his head while viewing the strange game of cricket played by the English—that is, if French boys do scratch their heads. Then, again, he might notice a Japanese lad watching with ludicrous amazement the apparent foolhardiness of American boys hitting a ball with a long stick and then running like mad around small sacks.

Baseball Is International.

But, after a while, the onlooker would discover that the French and Japanese boys would soon partake in these games, too, because the MacJannet camps are predicated on mutual understanding and friendship, each camper to help the other to comprehend and enjoy.

The children were entrusted to the care of amiable Lynn Frank Woodworth, athletic director of Washington's Roosevelt High School, and Mrs. Woodworth. The Woodworths introduced virtually all the sports and games extant with the possible exception of horseback riding. The MacJannet doctrine that "wholesome fun and clean sportsmanship are to be more highly prized than championships" is the underlying theme of all camp athletic endeavors.

Gaiety and camaraderie prevail in camp. An example of the sincerity and profundity of these friendships is best illustrated by the case of Hans de Younge, whose father was a colonel in the German army during the war. Hans enrolled at MacJannet's in 1928. He was an exceptionally brilliant student as evidenced by his feat of learning to speak English fluently while at camp. When the Nazis came into power and "Deutschland Uber Alles" was the phrase of the hour, every student was ordered to sign a Nazi pledge to support actively the country in any war undertaken. Hans would have to sign to receive his Nazi uniform. But this he adamantly refused to do, asserting:

"In camp, I've associated with boys of other nationalities for a number of years. I have found them friendly and fine, and I couldn't go to war to kill them simply because they are from another country."

Hans offered such a forceful, cogent argument that the Nazi officials, in light of his innate intelligence, permitted him to attend school without the necessary Nazi uniform.

Mr. Woodworth firmly believes that if a system of international camps akin to MacJannet's could be established on a more extensive basis the peace problem would soon be solved.

"To see the bright, eager faces of the boys and the warm friendships that spring up between the French and German boys, the Italian and the English, one wonders just how friends like these could fight each other."

Head Counsellor Woodworth introduced a junior life saving course of the American Red Cross in France and in 1928 Camper Betty Holdrege became the first youngster in France to win the distinction of junior life saving. She rescued a French councillor who ventured out beyond her depth in the lake, and for that accomplishment the late President Doumergue honored Betty with the Medaille de Sauvetage.

Camp l'Aiglon for the boys and Camp Alouette for the girls comprise the MacJannet settlement. Applicants up to 18 years are accepted, and many have spent most of their "hoods" and "teens" in camp. This year Woodworth had nine "alumni" graduating from Harvard. The rolls are comprised principally of sons and daughters of diplomatic representatives and Americans traveling on the continent on business. Not infrequently when they reach manhood and womanhood and feel the inevitable nostalgia campers return to the familiar, crystal-clear mineral waters of Annecy to serve as councillors.

In its aim "to provide a wholesome outdoor life and the fullest opportunity for individual development," the camp presents a wide scope of occupational activities. Children are taught, according to their varying interests, in woodworking, modeling, weaving, nature study, creative music, scouting, language study, photography and astronomy.

Virginia Beach Horse Jumping Is Set for Today

Holiday Spirit Contines at Cavalier Hotel, Beach Club.

At the sunset horse jumping jamboree today there will be a battle royal for supremacy to settle once and for all time the old dispute as to who are the better riders, those mounted on saddle horses or the riders up on hunters. About 20 contestants, judged by a committee, will participate in this event. Several other events are scheduled, including jumping contests in which about 40 horses have been entered. A sweepstake silver trophy will be presented to winner in the jumping events.

Mrs. Lester F. Hundt, of Washington, D. C., and Devon, Pa., and K. C. Johnson, of Virginia Beach, were elected recently as co-masters of the Princess Anne hounds for the coming season. The first event will be the hunter trials, sponsored by the Cavalier Stables, September 5.

The Cavalier Country Club in addition to being host to various small groups of colonist golfers will have two major tournaments this week. There will be an 18-hole sweepstake tournament with a field of about 150 next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. This tournament was arranged by J. H. Boylan, Philadelphia, and D. Webb Mason, Richmond. The second major tournament with about 50 entries, will be played at this club next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. This will be an 18-hole blind bogy tournament, arranged by C. S. Kennedy, New York; Charles R. Docker, Chicago, and George Groon, Jacksonville.

The Cavalier Beach Club features a daily tea dance followed by a dinner dance and revue presented by well-known artists. Johnny Long and his orchestra furnish the dance music.

Vacationists Discover Savannah's Attractions

An increasingly large number of vacationists are discovering the historic attractions of Savannah. In the Civil War Savannah was the key to the Georgia coast, and was closely watched by the Federal forces. The ordinance of secession was framed in Savannah, and it was here that the flag of the Confederate States was first hoisted in Georgia.

The most important events of the war in this vicinity were the capture of the supposedly impregnable Fort Pulaski, April 10, 1862, and the reduction of Fort McAllister December 12, 1864. Fort Pulaski has been made a national memorial by the United States Government. Savannah stands today as one of the quaintest and most interesting Southern cities, and is of great importance as an export center for cotton and for wood pulp.

Argentina's Gaucho.

The early occupation of catching and taming wild cattle and horses on the great pampas of Argentina produced a type of frontiersman somewhat like the American cowboy of the years between 1800 and 1880, yet more distinctly resembling the Cossack of southern Russia during the decades preceding the World War.

Rare White Marlin Captured By Bermuda Sea Fisherman

91-Pound Wahoo Is Another Recent Record Catch Off Picturesque Coral Island; Tourney Opens July 15.

Hamilton, Bermuda.—The fourth white marlin ever to be caught by rod and reel in Bermuda waters, was landed last week by one of Bermuda's prominent lawyers, James E. Pearman, after a half-hour struggle. When weighed it totaled 66 pounds, the same weight as the one mounted in the Bermuda Government Aquarium, and measured 7 feet and 4 inches.

This unusual catch for Bermuda lends a decided impetus to the deep-sea and game-fishing tournament which gets under way officially July 15 and continues until August 31. This tournament, for those game fishermen who prefer salt-water fishing, has many advantages, especially from the standpoint of limitless catches. With well-stocked waters surrounding the little Coral Isle, Bermuda offers an ideal location for deep-sea fishing. Now the Island can be reached in five hours by air on the luxury flying boats jointly operated by Pan-American and Imperial Airways.

New and record-breaking catches seem to be the Bermuda fashion. Only last month Harry Tucker, well-known Bermuda fisherman, pulled in the record-weight wahoo for Atlantic waters—91 pounds.

In this particular white marlin catch, according to Pearman, the fish hit the line on the outrigger which was fixed with a No. 24 thread and a 14-ounce tip and was trailing tuna belly bait; snapped the clothes pin which was holding the line and took it about 50 feet before he was stopped.

"Making four complete leaps out of the water before he was landed after a hard struggle," said Pearman, "I had three guesses as to what species he was, and they were all wrong until I had him up close."

The party of fishermen composed of John Bluck, jr., and E. C. Pearman was on Capt. Charlie Christensen's well-equipped Dolphin, from which the other three white marlin were also caught last year. The first one was snatched from his salt bath by Mrs. Stanley W. Smith, of Pittsburgh, on January 22, 1936. On July 18 Francis H. Lowe, of New York City, made the second catch, and the third was caught on October 17 by W. Gillwylie, also of New York City.

The wahoo, according to Victor Cody, prominent sportsman, of the United States, who was here making color pictures of Bermuda salt-water fishing, is the game fish which is both abundant and sporting, and should make Bermuda's name in the fishing world.

"While I was out fishing the other day I saw two tuna, which, I'm not exaggerating, ran over 400 pounds each. The fish are around Bermuda; all you need are the fishermen down here to fish for them."

Bonita, rockah, barracuda and amberjack are some of the other salt water fish which can be caught in great numbers in Bermuda.

The British Shetlands.

There are more than a hundred large and small islands in the Shetland group, but only about a third of them are inhabited. They lie about 110 miles north of Scotland and less than twice that distance from the coast of Norway, to which country they belonged after Harold Haarfager, first King of Norway, conquered the Piets, the Islands, early settlers, in 875. Later James II of Scotland loaned Christian I of Norway and Sweden a large sum of money, and accepted the Shetlands as security. Christian did not meet his "note" when it became due, and the Shetlands consequently became Scotch (later English) properly.

Silk Trees Thrive In This Climate

Hardy Shrub Makes Good Afternoon Shade.

Albizzia julibrissin is the rather difficult scientific name of the large shrub or small tree that goes by several popular names—mimosa, acacia and silktree. Washington is near the northern range of this tree, but it has been hardy here and has not been injured seriously in recent severe winters.

This tree is not the true mimosa. It is closely related to the acacicas, and is a beauty both in and out of bloom. If trained to a fairly spreading habit with limbs well clear of the ground it makes a splendid sun shade for afternoon comfort on the lawn.

The shade is not dense and solid, but cuts off strong sun. In late June fine specimens of the tree are one of the pleasing features of Washington and the tree deserves wider planting. It does not seem to be particular as to soil, and flourishes in this vicinity.

State of Virginia Opens 3,000,000 Acres of National Forest for Playgrounds

Fine Areas Offer Many Camp Sites

Lakes, Hills and Forests All Included in State.

Touring, Camping and Hiking All Popular Pastimes.

Richmond, Va.—More than a score of forest camps and recreational areas scattered throughout the 3,000,000 acres of national forests that bound the western edge of Virginia opened this month with greater facilities than ever before, according to the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce. Five major recreational areas are included in this group, while there are many quiet and beautiful camp grounds in the heart of the mountains, where CCC workers have placed every modern facility for the vacationist.

Opening of the new Sherando Lake Forest Camp, with its 207-foot dam impounding a 20-acre lake, featured the week's events in forest recreation development. The camp, located in George Washington Natoinal Forest, 14 miles southeast of Waynesboro, was completed during the winter and promises to become one of the most popular of all Virginia camps.

All Conveniences.

Facilities announced include a roomy pavilion for picnickers, dressing rooms and showers for bathers, a first-aid station, diving platforms in the lake, a wading pool, a complete water supply system to every part of the area, three picnic areas with fireplaces, 20 camp sites and space for trailer use, trails for hikers and a campfire circle for evening entertainment.

Other national forest camps in the George Washington area include Elizabeth Furnace Camp, long popular and located near Strasburg in the Massanutten Mountains; the New Market Gap Forest Camp, on U. S. Highway 211 east of New Market, and the North River Forest Camp, at the Staunton Dam, northwest of Staunton.

Campfire permits are not required at these established camps and all facilities are free to the public.

Farther south, close to Lynchburg, the Jefferson National Forest has enlarged the beach at Cave Mountain National Forest Camp, erected a modern, stationary diving platform, organized a staff of registered lifeguards and constructed bathhouses and showers along the beach. John C. Shipley has been named custodian.

Others in the Jefferson Forest include the Snow Creek Camp, on U. S. Highway 501, 5 miles from Glasgow, and the Comers Rock Camp, 4 miles off U. S. Highway 21 at a point about 20 miles from Wytheville.

Mountain Trails.

More than 600 miles of hiker and horseback trails have been constructed through the mountains for the convenience of rangers, fire wardens and for the use of vacationists. Horses are available in many places and additional data on recreational facilities in the forests may be obtained from M. C. Howard, acting forest supervisor of the George Washington National Forest at Harrisonburg, or John W. McNair, supervisor of the Jefferson National Forest at Roanoke. "The National Forest Service is anxious for the public to make use of the facilities of the National Forests on every opportunity," the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce stated today. "Several years of work on the part of CCC units to make the forests attractive, develop camp sites and cottage areas, build safe water facilities and to preserve the natural beauty of the area and create lakes, ponds and recreational areas has just reached summation. Visitors who delight in mountain scenery will find many miles of splendid forest roads leading through beautiful wooded areas for their tours. Any ranger or supervisor in the National Forest Service will be glad to aid you plan your tours."

Clipping Old Iris Leaves Is Unwise

Cuts Down Food Supply, Next Year's Bloom.

Many iris growers who have noted the cropped leaves of newly planted iris decide to follow the style and make their plantings neater by removing half or more of the foliage of established plants. This is poor gardening.

Cropping the leaves of newly planted divisions may be necessary to conserve moisture, but established plants can draw all the moisture required by the foliage. Cropping the leaves cuts down the food supply and the plants will not bloom so generously the next spring.

Experienced iris growers do not expect first quality bloom the first season after division because of the interruption in plant feeding, but there is no point at all in imposing continued starvation for the sake of neat appearance.

Quaint Names Lure Tourists In Northland

Canadian Cities and Villages Reflect Foreign Backgrounds.

The thrill of hearing foreign names and of learning of their unusual and often symbolic origin is not the least interesting part of a motor tour through Eastern Canada. At almost any bend of the road the motorist may come upon some village or natural wonder which carries a story behind its Indian, French or English appellation.

Simplest are those places taking their names from the first explorers, such as the town of Joliette, northeast of Montreal, so called in memory of the discoverer of the Mississippi; or Chambly, on the Richlieu River, named in honor of Capt. Jacques de Chambly; or the Chateu Frontenac, which takes its origin from the Compte de Frontenac, strongest governor of New France, whose chateau once occupied its site.

Other names, more subtly arrived at, include:

HaHa Bay in the Saguenay River—The "HaHa" was what some French explorers got when they discovered the bay and thought at first it was the Northwest Passage to China.

Lachine Rapids near Montreal—La Chine means China in French. The Chevalier de LaSalle set out for the West (and China and the Orient) from a spot near the rapids. After his failure to reach the Orient, his enemies named the spot and the rapids "LaChine" in derision.

Quebec—At this city the St. Lawrence narrows to a mile in width. Kebec was the Algonkian (Indian) name for straits or narrows. The rest is easy.

Toronto—Whoever gave this city its Indian name, Toronto, meaning "place of meeting," did so aptly. Last year nearly half a million motor tourists congregated here, drawn by its annual exhibition, its cool lake front, its Royal York Hotel and its interesting museums and parks.

St. Lawrence River—Thus named by Jacques Cartier, the St. Malo sailor, because it was on the feast day of this saint that he entered St. Lawrence Bay in 1535.

Montreal—A contraction of the name of a famous hill that overlooks the city—Mont Royal (or Mount Royal). Incidentally, motor tourists must take to carriages to see this mountain, since autos are barred from near-sacred Mont Royal.

Canada—Last but not least, there is a legend that the name was a mistake of Cartier's. When an Indian chief told him a nearby village was called Kanada, Cartier believed this referred to the entire country and so labeled it.

Feathery Bloom Of Cohosh Plant Found in Valley

The cohosh or white snake root (Cimicifuga racemosa) is one of the aristocrats of the wild woodlands in July. One little valley that opens on Conduit road in the vicinity of the Carderock subdivision has offered a splendid display of this plant with its feathery plumes so favored by the bumble bees.

This is definitely not the time to lift a plant from its natural surroundings. It is easy to identify it either spring or fall by its characteristic foliage. It is abundant enough so that it is not vandalism to remove one or two young plants from a site where it is well seeded.

In the garden it does well, and asks only to be let alone in a shady spot with a mulch of leaves each fall, and perhaps a soaking with the hose in a long dry spell. The clump increases in size gradually and will add one or two blossoming shoots a year. A 7-year-old plant near a north wall has more than a dozen slender spikes of bloom that are never quite at rest. Gentle breezes sway them, and if the breeze fails the weight of the bumble bees working the blossoms is just enough to induce slight vibrations.

3,500 Travel Agents Willing To Prepare Plans for Tours

Specialists Eliminate Hours of Work and Confusion; Trained to Give Informatioon on Even Smallest Details of Trips.

By Darrell Preston Aub.

As the summer travel season blooms, more and more people keep asking and writing "where can I find out about . . . etc."

The answer to them all is as simple as a b c . . . ask your travel agent!

Did you know there are about 3,500 travel agents in the United States, and that their sole purpose of being in business is to help you plan and arrange your travels? They don't care how you go, where or when, all they're interested in is seeing that you go with the least effort, get the most for your money, and save interminable shopping around.

The travel agent is really the "clearing house" for all manner of products related to journeying . . . transportation, hotels, resorts, travelers' checks baggage and accident insurance, tours and cruises, to mention some of them. His income isn't made through any extra charges to you—you pay the same whether you go to him or to the steamship line—but from the principals whose products he sells, and who pay him a commission, and who, incidentally, have taken from their shoulders the burden of providing sufficient officers to cover the entire country.

Some of the larger travel agents, like the American Express, which are well known throughout the world, employ men who have spent their business lives perfecting themselves in the knowledge of travel details and the solving of travel problems. Most of the men are widely traveled themselves, so that they know whereof they speak. The work is highly specialized . . . all to your own benefit . . . so that there's someone to tell you about a street in Johannesburg, South Africa, where to buy your perfumes cheapest, how much the little "extras" will cost on your trip, which ship is best for you, what kind of a room you're being assigned, and countless other details without which the traveler is at a distinct disadvantage. They're in constant touch with the developments in all phases of travel, so you can be certain your information is up-to-the-minute.

When you go to a travel agent for a tour of Europe, whether by your own planning or one of their own prearranged trips, you are sure that the minutest details are taken care of in advance. Besides, you're literally handed around from office to office abroad—Amexco offices circle the globe—and everybody knows you're coming. But that's not all. Suppose you want to go cruising this summer? Reading the travel ads is exciting, but it does make you a bit dizzy when it comes to deciding. The travel agent, on the other hand, has a complete list unadorned by fancy words—that tells you exactly what you want to know . . . sailing dates, duration, prices, sightseeing, et al. And he'll do the actual buying of your space himself, once you decide which it's to be. Which, these hot, busy summer days, is a relief indeed! He'll give you unbiased information on ships that the ads would never tell you. Graphically speaking, why don't you save yourself a headache—and maybe a heartache—and go visit your travel agent?

To Rome Via the Old Appian Way

Leaving the ship and the blue Adriatic at Brindisi, where the ruins of two columns marking the end of the old Via Appia, that figures so prominently in Caesar's Gallic Wars, still stand by the quay, one is inspired to motor up the modern road to Naples and Rome.

Fig, olive, almond and chestnut groves make the driving delightful. Old towns with fussy byzantine churches contrasting the simplicity of modern buildings tempt the browser. The car whizzes on past the rolling hills of Lombardy, up a steep ascent of mountains and down to the plains of the Campanian countryside, where vines hang from tree to tree.

Coming into Naples the road is bordered by plane trees and Naples at night is a beautiful dream. Stringed instruments sound over the waters from the quays along the seashore and sudden bursts of melody come from the old, old streets of the romantic town.

Vesuvius dominates the scene for some time from Naples. Old castles, flanking hills punctuated with poplars make one think of medieval tapestry instead of the age of airplanes.

Nearing Rome, the miracle of the reclaimed Pontine marshes, once haunted by dread malaria, now flowering with prosperous little farms and villages.

Italy's past is not dead. It lives in new activities. Building the wide Via Imperator and clearing away of the hill and houses that obscured the view of the ancient Roman forums have brought glory back to the scene and made old Rome alive rather than a heap of decadent ruins.

The city is beautiful with wide roadways and white buildings and markets filled with flowers riotous in color, bright sun and deep shadows cast by impressive cathedrals and proud monuments dramatize one's every step.

Cruise to Chile By Grace Liner Starts July 30

First Round Trip Voyage to Be Made Within Month's Time.

Grace Line announces a special all-expense 32-day cruise to Chile sailing from New York on the Santa Lucia July 30—the first round trip voyage to Panama, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Chile to be brought within the limits of a month's vacation.

The itinerary covers a daylight trip through the Panama Canal with sightseeing in the terminal cities and time to do the shops and beer gardens; Callao, Peru, and the capital city Lima, with trips to the nearby mountain resort of Chosica and the ruins of Pachacamac and Cajamarquilla, cities believed to have been in ruins even before the Incas established their capital at Cuzco; the picturesque ports of Mollendo, port for southern Peru and Bolivia; Arica and Antofagasta, through which the copper and nitrate of Chile finds its way to the markets of the world; Valparaiso and Vina del Mar, the Lido of the West Coast with its famous casino and gay bathing beaches; and a trip through gorgeous mountain scenery to Santiago, Chile's capital.

Northbound the route covers Chanaral and Antofagasta, Chile; Mollendo, Peru; a return visit to Lima, Spanish colonial "City of the Kings," built with gold and silver taken from Peru's rich mines, and from the temples and palaces of the Incas; Talara, a strange-looking little town of oil derricks and tanks, and houses set in luxurious gardens, rising from a sand-covered coast where no rain falls for years at a time; a voyage up the jungle-bordered Guayas River to Guayaquil, gateway to Ecuador; Buenaventura, important port of Colombia; a second voyage through the canal; and to top off the cruise, a visit in gay Havana.

Paul Bunyan's Sign Language Stirred Breezes in Wisconsin

Legendary Woodman of Huge Proportions Sent Wind Whistling When He Waved Hands in Talk With Deaf Lumberjack.

When evening breezes blow upon summer vacationists in Wisconsin's north woods, mellow old-timers may be found giving thanks to Paul Bunyan, Wisconsin's legendary lumberjack Gargantua, whose dextrous loquacity started the breezes blowing. Paul, you will recall, was that remarkable fellow whose lesser talents included the ability to lay a whole forest with one swing of his ax. He is one of America's few genuine folklore characters.

Now Paul had an ox team. When he backed that team everyone for miles around scurried for cover. One day John Durick, a deaf lumberjack, didn't see Paul and the ox team coming, and remained where he was, picking and eating wintergreen berries. Dictator of his day, Paul was furious at this lese-majesty. With one seven-league stride, he reached John Durick, snatched him up bodily, roared into his deaf ears.

Durick's appealing look of dismay softened Paul's rage. There and then he sat down with the 'jack and learned from him the sign language of the deaf—so says A. G. Leisman, president of the Wisconsin Association of the Deaf, whose yarn this is.

All this happened, you understand, long ago—very long ago. And in those days the summers in the forest were hot—very hot—and the nights tropical in their calm humidity. Paul Bunyan noticed how his lumberjacks, sleepless, tossed in their bunks. To him he summoned his deaf friend. And there, in the long-ago evening in the purple shadow of the pines, the two talked—talked the sign language of those who have ears and do not hear. Paul's huge hands, waving in the night like giant cabbage-palms, so bestirred the air that cooling breezes soon were hustling through the camp.

Night after night the two engaged in manual colloquy. And the breezes, goaded from their summer lethargy, began blowing regularly; and so, through singing pines, they blow today.

Old Point Comfort Has Historic Background

Old Point Comfort Beach, Va.—Although a recent survey of visitors coming to Old Point Comfort shows that Americans are still a Nation of sightseers intent on visiting the many historical shrines in this area, it also reveals that summer pleasure seekers are demanding a diversity of attractions found in all their completeness at this resort with its century old background, on the shores of the tranquil Chesapeake.

The first rude earthworks were thrown up at Old Point Comfort in 1609 under the direction of Capt. John Ratcliffe, as a protection for the settlements on the James River. Named Fort Algernourne in honor of William de Percy, first Lord Algernon who had come to England with William the Conqueror, by 1611 it was well stockaded and contained seven heavy guns, but in March, 1612, accidentally burned to the ground.

During the remainder of the century the fortifications were rebuilt several times, but each time fell into disrepair through changes in government administration, and it was not until 1728 that work on Fort George was started after authoriaztion by the Virginia House of Burgesses.

Festival Season.

The festival summer season of Vienna brings into prominence the regattas, tennis and golf tournaments and other outdoor events, in which the houses and even the street cars and motor buses will participate, with flags and bunting to fit the spirit of the occasion.

The Cinema Takes Undisputed Command of Mid-July Theatrical Entertainment

Hollywood Drops Its Shyness And Poses for Its Cameramen

The Film Capital Experiences a Change of Heart and Permits Itself to Be Filmed as It Is as Background for New Pictures.

By Nelson B. Bell.

IT IS that astute analyst of Hollywood and its surface activities and deeper psychology, Mr. Melrose Gower, who calls my attention to the fact that the film capital, at long last, has decided to capitalize its own glamour and fame.

For years, Mr. Gower points out, filmdom has quietly evaded the utilization of Hollywood and the making of motion pictures as a background for any of the myriad stories it translates into terms of celluloid drama, preferring to place Boy and Girl in Paris or Podunk, San Francisco or the Sahara, New York or Newport or any other geographical points that may be thought to be of interest. Hollywood, it was tacitly agreed, was taboo as the locale for a successful film play.

Today all that is changed. The major film companies on the West Coast are producing gelatin dramas with Hollywood as the locale and with film actors enacting, of all things, the roles of film actors engaged in the art of pursuing their profession. RKO-Radio seems to be rather in the van of this unexpected movement with three Hollywood pictures to its credit—"Hollywood Cowboy," with George O'Brien starred; "Music for Madame," with Nino Martini and Joan Fontaine, and "Super Sleuth," the current attraction at RKO-Keith's, with Jack Oakie and Ann Sothern.

Paramount is starring Gertrude Michael in a new release in her popular Sophie Lang series, "Sophie Lang in Hollywood," and Columbia is filming "It Happened in Hollywood," with Richard Arlen and Fay Wray. Over at Walter Wanger's celluloid factory, Mr. Gower says, Leslie Howard is portraying the leading role in a production called "Stand-In" and Warner Brothers soon are to produce "Hollywood Hotel," with Dick Powell in the stellar part. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's contribution to the list of productions with a Hollywood setting is entitled "Wedding Dress," with Rosalind Russell and Robert Montgomery co-starred, as they were in "Night Must Fall."

Grand National has just completed "Love Takes Flight," with Bruce Cabot and Beverly Roberts, and, of course, there is Selznick-International's established hit, "A Star Is Born," starring Janet Gaynor and Fredric March.

EACH of these productions is a bona fide Hollywood-background production, with the studios and the making of pictures tossed into the story for good measure and a touch of novelty. So it becomes obvious that Hollywood finally has realized that, of all the places in the world, Hollywood itself is ideally suited to serve as an atmospheric and picturesque background against which the fateful or humorous stories of the screen may be played.

Why in the past, except in a few isolated instances, Hollywood refused to allow itself to appear on the screen is a matter of conjecture and one difficult to understand. Possibly, like all things that are young and still growing, the motion picture capital could not stand to see itself as others saw it, or imagined they saw it. It could not tolerate having its mistakes laughed at and its players ridiculed, so Hollywood as a screen story locale simply was not used.

But there was no such diffidence on the part of Older Brother Stage. The living theater, sure of itself and indifferent to the sensitiveness of shrinking natures, saw nothing abusive or unethical in portraying Hollywood as it imagined Hollywood must be. "Once in a Lifetime" and "Boy Meets Girl" are the two classic examples of that imagination. America broke into loud guffaws at sight of these two hilarious exhibits. Hollywood said it wasn't so and tried to prove it by making its own picturization of "Once in a Lifetime." After that effort, nobody in Hollywood seemed to entertain any irresistible urge to go any further in the dramatization of the cinema and its people.

Then unobtrusively out of the vast silence of the nowhere into the here came "A Star Is Born." To Janet Gaynor the film brought new fame and a restoration of her standing as a star, but to Hollywood in general it brought a realization that as "the city of glamour" it was ready to parade itself in public.

Assuredly, one picture could not have changed either the mental processes or philosophy of Hollywood; rather it must have been a case of Hollywood's being ready for the transition through the unseen workings of psychological forces, and "A Star Is Born" served only as an external and tangible symbol of that change.

ONCE the tenet was firmly rooted in the minds of the motion picture moguls, Hollywood, which never does things by halves, went the whole way, even to the extent of enjoying a laugh at the expense of some of the heretofore sacred cows of the film industry.

In "Super Sleuth," for example, the increasingly corpulent Mr. Oakie enacts the role of an amazingly brilliant screen detective, who solves the most baffling crimes with an easy and airy nonchalance—until, according to the story, he is faced with the task of solving a murder mystery in real life!

It is then that Mr. Oakie discovers himself to be in precisely the same predicament any other mortal would be—he is, in brief, baffled, nonplussed and completely flabbergasted. But until that moment arrives, the portly actor is every inch—and there are now a good many inches of him—the super-sleuth; the calm, collected, slightly superior master of men.

Thus, "Super Sleuth" really caricatures the heretofore faultless and infallible crime solver of the cinema world. It not only utilizes Hollywood as a background for much of its action, but it has the temerity to make good-natured fun of its own people. In this regard it goes a little farther than the other pictures brought to life under the new order.

• • • •

THIS does not mean, however, that the engrossing tales of the super-deductionists of the celluloids are to drop precipitately and unretrievably from the face of the silver sheet. Not by any means.

FRANCHOT TONE AND MAUREEN O'SULLIVAN,
As they appear in two of the three pivotal roles in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's production of "Between Two Women," a drama with a background of hospitals and surgery, in which the third featured part is played by Virginia Bruce. This is the current screen attraction at Loew's Capitol Theater.

THOSE MAD MARXMEN,
Otherwise, Groucho, Chico and Harpo, reading from bottom to top, the remaining three-fourths of the original Marx Brothers, the most eminent zanies of stage and screen. Their latest and by far most hilarious vehicle is a comic whimsy concerning a bankrupt sanitarium and the winning of a steeplechase race at a swanky metropolitan track. It is a comedy with music of a high order and bears the name of "A Day at the Races." It is the current attraction at Loew's Palace Theater, where it is rolling the customers in the aisles, as the saying goes, in the exuberance of their uncontrollable mirth.

Comedy Is King As Hot Weather Hits Broadway

By Mark Barron.

New York, July 10.—Business, strangely enough, flaunts an optimistic hue in the theater at this sultry season of the year when usually there are few plays and fewer customers. And, there is this unquestionable verity, sight of the nine dramas flourishing these warm nights are out-and-out comedies. Theatergoers, seemingly, are oblivious to the temperature if only they can laugh.

The one exception is "Excursion," which is an excellent, serious drama, but still lightened by being a sort of humorous fantasy. It is the story of that enlightened, fanciful group of ferryboat passengers who decide to abandon the worries of a modern civilized city to seek brave adventure to a desert island. Following, in an earthy manner, the mood of that other success of a decade ago, "Outward Bound," it takes its ordinary earth-bound characters into a world of imagination that transforms them from suburban commuters into knights and ladies and rogues of the romantic ages.

But that is the sole exception in the Times Square byways, for the remaining shows are designed strictly for laughs. The two prize plays are both confined to one laugh after another, "You Can't Take It With You," which won the Pulitzer Prize, is the No. 1 prize play of the theater.

The Dramatists Guild prize went to "Having Wonderful Time," and in the citation this hilarious picture from Arthur Kober's typewriter was described as "The best comedy of the year."

It is a profile of a summer camp of young Jewish folk seeking rural exile from New York City and so much of it is laughter that it is only when one has a quiet moment to read the manuscript that it is realized that here Kober also has written a fine play.

Kober not only has a flair for flip dialogue, but he supports his laughs with an artful pace of tearful and heart throbbing moments.

All the other plays now attracting pleasant summer business on Broadway are those of a mirthful nature. George Abbott has two of them, "Room Service" and "Brother Rat," and they are both staged with that same humorous pace that so distinguished his first play, "Broadway," which he co-authored with Philip Dunning.

Ayres Silent on Remarriage Idea

Caught romancing again with Ginger Rogers, who was visiting him on the set of "Last Train From Madrid," Lew Ayres refused to talk. At least about Ginger and the possibility of their remarrying.

"The subject hasn't come up between us," he said. But he admitted that he would like to be married again."

Franchot Tone Can Now Be a Shepherd

DICK POWELL,
As "The Singing Marine," a new Warner Brothers production, in which the star is cast as an enlisted man in the Marine Corps, who incurs the hatred of his company by going "high hat" after success as a radio singer. He squares himself in the end. Now on the screen at the Earle Theater.

Unknowns Are Expected to Be Shot to Heights

Hollywood's well-established axiom that the star makes the picture sometimes works in reverse.

Just often enough to be the exception that proves the rule, it's the picture that makes the star.

These exceptions have been popping up ever since the infancy of the picture industry. A few have been fortunate accidents. Far more have been the happy result of shrewd showmanship.

Realizing that their greatest stock in trade is stellar personalities who possess the box-office appeal to lure paying customers to the theater, producers have deliberately cast unknown players of exceptional promise in pictures which, because of dramatic power, magnitude, timeliness or type of characterization appear to be natural star creators.

It is not necessary to slight any cinematic period in mustering an impressive roll of star-making pictures. Such silent films as "The Four Horsemen," which made a star of the late Rudolph Valentino, and "The Big Parade," which lifted the late John Gilbert into the top flight of box-office attractions, are typical.

To come down to the modern sound era; there's "Flying Down to Rio," which created not one star, but two, in Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers. Miss Rogers, it is true, had been a screen featured player of standing, but Astaire, despite his stage success, was a cinema unknown.

There's also "David Copperfield," from which the youthful Freddie Bartholomew emerged a full-fledged luminary, and "Captain Blood," which draped the stellar mantle about Errol Flynn's broad shoulders.

And now there's "The Hurricane," Samuel Goldwyn's $1,500,000 film version of the novel of the same name by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, authors of "Mutiny on the Bounty," which should make a star of Jon Hall.

Hall, a cinema unknown is being hailed as a "new Goldwyn discovery." As the native hero, Terangi, he has drawn one of the prize acting assignments of the year.

Goldwyn, who could have had most any big name player he desired for this part, deliberately chose an unknown. He did it for two reasons. First, he considered Jon Hall an ideal Terangi. The boy has a magnificent physique, is handsome and tests proved that he can act. He was born in Tahiti,

Stars Stay in Own Back Yards When Old Sol Gets In His Work

Many Novel Forms of Entertainment Are Afforded by Round of Week-End Parties at Noted Homes, Which Also Defeats the Autograph Pest.

By Howard Strickling.

Hollywood, July 10.

And now it's summer, the time of the year when stars come out to bask in the sun—the season when Hollywood turns to its back yards for social activities.

Days when summer was the signal for a general migration from the film city are past. Now, it's just the opposite.

In winter, screen favorites hie to Palm Springs, to Arrowhead, to Sun Valley. But as soon as Old Sol decides to stop playing around and bring summer in with a vengeance, actors and actresses seat themselves in their respective homes, send out invitations via telephone and proceed to enjoy themselves in their natural surroundnigs.

Probably the pioneer in this summer back-yard festivity movement is Joan Crawford.

Every Sunday during the summer months Miss Crawford and husband, Franchot Tone, hold open house from noon until midnight. Guests dropping in early amuse themselves by taking dips in the pool, playing tennis, badminton or ping pong.

When the day begins to cool, buffet supper is served from the large patio porch.

Una Merkel's Saturday night barbecues are as inevitable to summer as a sun tan.

It was several years ago that Una completed her long-planned barbecue pit and out-of-door dining room, and since that time Hollywood has made a red-letter event out of its Saturday evenings.

Informality, of course, rules. Guests may appear in anything from slack suits to sports dresses and feel perfectly at home. Dinner is served on long rustic tables stretching unbelievable lengths under a pergola. The service, including plates, knives and forks, is wooden.

After dinner, guests are invited to amuse themselves with any one of more than three hundred games, in adidtion to night tennis and badminton on lighted courts.

Joining this year's band of summer stay-at-homes is Robert Taylor, who has already planned some interesting entertainment for guests at his recently purchased ranch in the valley.

Bob also prefers the barbecue type of dinner, and, after the meal, his guests are invited to take moonlight horseback rides along nearby mountain trails.

Sunday is guest day for Elissa Landi.

The actress issues her invitation for 6 o'clock Sunday morning. All of the guests meet at her home where horses are provided. A ride along the bridle trails follows, and, after approximately two hours, the party arrives at some wooded, out-of-the-way spot where tables are spread and bacon and eggs are soon sizzling.

Following breakfast the guests are invited back to the Landi home where the remainder of the day is spent in out-of-door sports, or, for those who enjoy music, rare programs of symphonic recordings.

Cecilia Parker, who leads Hollywood's younger set, has already started a "stay at home this summer" movement by spending her vacation money on a red-and-white trailer, to match her red-and-white car.

In this she gives trailer parties. The youngsters get together early in the evening and travel to the beach where arrangements have been made for a wiener bake.

Both radio and phonograph may be found in the trailer; also, an extra platform that folds and tucks away, proves ideal as a small but efficient dance floor.

The beach, this summer, is proving a rendezvous for Maureen O'Sullivan and husband John Villiers Farrow.

The couple have taken a large house at Malibu, where they entertain over the week-ends with shore dinners.

The most unusual party of this season has already been staged by Allan Jones, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer singer appearing currently opposite Jeanette MacDonald in "The Firefly."

Jones, and wife Irene Hervey issued invitations to a "dock party," and instructed guests to wear old clothes.

When the hour arrived, the guests appeared at the spot where the Jones' yacht was in dry dock. A buffet meal was served, after which everyone went to work sanding and painting the boat, preparing it for its first trip of the season.

Boat trips to Catalina is a manner of entertaining favored by this popular Hollywood couple.

Among popular local spots is the Hollywood Bowl, where during the season numerous stars, among them Nelson Eddy, Edna May Oliver, May Robson and Jeanette MacDonald, reserve boxes and entertain nightly with symphony parties. Following this there ensues a raid on respective iceboxes that have been well stocked with provisions.

Amusement piers at the various beaches continue to intrigue Hollywood's very young.

Judy Garland, Betty Jaynes, Freddie Bartholomew, Mickey Rooney and John Arlington "do" the various and sundry roller coasters and fun houses every Saturday night and return to their homes loaded with loot in the form of plaster of Paris dolls, animals, fish and fowl.

If ever the idea of a trip presents itself, it is safe to assume that the distance will not be far from home territory.

Santa Barbara is a favorite spot with Rosalind Russell who finds rest and contentment in the quiet beauty of this unique California city.

Madge Evans, on the other hand, assembles her five dogs, hops into her car and is at Lake Arrowhead before anyone knows she has left. The actress is so fond of this resort that she has decided upon a summer home there. As the present time, she is renting a large lodge where her friends can drop in and enjoy themselves, Saturdays and Sundays.

But Hollywood is the summer is essentially a "back yard" town with the stars loath to leave their respective swimming pools and game courts for the hotel comforts.

It is just as well for the stars to remain in the seclusion of their back yards these days, otherwise they would stand in imminent peril of being ambushed.

Though they arm themselves with pencils instead of guns, and their ammunition is the fluttering pages of autograph books, Hollywood's own special brand of hunters are the world's most redoubtable Nimrods.

Their quarry is the stars and they stalk their screen favorites with a skill that is almost legendary.

Hollywood's brand of hunters almost never misses. They know, for instance, the habits of their quarry almost as well as the stars themselves.

They know that on Monday night, if they lie carefully in wait outside the wrestling matches, the ingoing or outcoming crowds are certain to include Spencer Tracy, Eleanor Powell, Nelson Eddy and Robert Taylor and many another devotee of the writhe-and-grunt exhibitions.

They know that on Tuesday it is a pretty safe bet to wait outside the Cocoanut Grove for Gladys George; that if they want to trek down the trail to Los Angeles they can waylay Clark Gable or Wallace Beery at the Olympic boxing matches.

A fan's week in Hollywood will never except Wednesday night's chances at the roller skating rinks. Jeanette MacDonald is likely to be there, or Bill Powell or Virginia Bruce with a large party out for a lark.

Thursday is the maid's night out. Nobody knows this better than John Fan and his girl friend. And

'Zenda' Choice Of Roadsiders For This Week

Anthony Hope's Romantic Drama Will Open in Red Barn Tomorrow.

When the Roadside opens its third production of the season tomorrow night, the stage of the barn theater will be peopled by as famous a company of characters as ever made a play truly great. There will be Rudolf Rassendyll, Rupert of Hentzau, Rudolf the Fifth of Ruritania, Princess Flavia, the Black Elphberg and a host of others in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

A man of action, of fearless daring, adventure-loving—such is Rudolf Rassendyll, picturesque and romantic hero of Anthony Hope's famous story. E. H. Sothern, Francis Hackett and Lewis Stone made him live on stage and screen. In the Roadside production, Richard Kreuzberg, hero of last summer's "Arizona," will play the dual role of a Rassendyll and Rudolf the Fifth of Ruritania.

For a heroine, who could prefer other than the beautiful Princess Flavia, betrothed to the monarch, loving the English adventurer, yet strong enough to sacrifice her happiness for the welfare of her country, Virginia True, whose excellent performances in "Around the World in 80 Days," "Arizona," "Among the Moonshiners" and "The Wizard of the Wave" made her one of Roadside's most popular leading ladies, will impersonate Flavia.

Another strong feminine character is that of Antoinette de Mauban, torn between her love for the villainous Prince Michael and her horror at the crime he commits. In "Arizona" and "Sherlock Holmes," Betty Gray revealed her talent for strongly dramatic roles, and as Antoinette she will enhance her reputation.

In the roles of those two loyal officers, Col. Sapt and Fritz von Tarlenheim, will be J. Edmond Veitch and Ralph Fowler, veterans of many Roadside offerings. Ranged opposite them in the struggle for a kingdom will be Lawrence Beckerman, as Prince Michael, the Black Elphberg and Michael McKnight as the dashing Rupert of Hentzau.

Glen Echo Park Serves Capital Its Summer Fun

More Than Fifty Devices Are Available to While Away an Evening.

Glen Echo Park, Washington's free-admission amusement park and recreation center, offers more than 50 forms of diversion for all the family.

The crystal swimming pool, most popular of all features, is open from 9:30 a. m. until 11:30 at night, with the sand beach adjoining free to the patrons of the pool. Umbrellas of gay colors, beach chairs and the real white sand, with the blue-green water of the pool in the foreground, all go to make the crystal pool a beauty spot worthy of an artist's admiration.

The Spanish garden ballroom also offers excellent diversion, every week night from 9 until midnight, to the rhythm of David McWilliams' orchestra, playing the successful song hits of today as well as any of the popular melodies of yesteryear that may be requested. Kitty Simons is the featured vocalist with David's orchestra, with additional specialties being presented by the boys in the band.

Others of the attractions at Glen Echo Park are nine thrill rides, midway of fun, games of skill, and all such.

There are no parking worries at Glen Echo Park. A large free parking area adjoining the park and having a special entrance to the attractions offers accommodations for approximately 1,000 cars.

Too many purchasers are complaining that they had been deceived into believing the book concerns Sex! . . . Estelle Taylor opens at the Colony Surf Club in Deal tonight . . . The Communist Party asked the National Broadcasting Company for permission to broadcast, on July 4, a debate on the question "Resolved—That the Communists Are the True Bearers of the Revolutionary Traditions of '76." It reads: "Ham At Its Best" . . . Tuesday night at Jack Dempsey's M. G. M. shot scenes for "The Big City." One scene showed gangsters dashing out of Dempsey's, and piling into cars which roared off. The extras were instructed to walk casually past the entrance and then evince excitement . . . One extra, an attractive young lady, acted as shocked and curious as though all this was so strange. She was Marion "Kiki" Roberts—sweetheart of the slain Jack "Legs" Diamond!

On the back cover of "The Ruling Clawss"—a book of political cartoons by Redfield—are listed indorsements by prominent artists. Gropper, Gardner Rea and Hugo Gellert are among those who laud the author's work . . . The simplest of the indorsements is by Cartoonist Hoff, who merely attests "He's good too!"—a modest statement, inasmuch as Redfield is the nom de Art employed by Hoff. They're one and the same person.

On countless of these programs Van Vorhiss has announced "As it must to all men, death came today to——." Two years ago the "March of Time" officials asked him to prepare a recording of his own obituary, wherein would be announced: "As it must to all men, death came today to me, Westbrook van Vorhiss." . . . And for two years he's been delaying making the recording.

Fidler Reveals Film Colony's Secret Doings

Rambling Reporter Finds Garbo Likes to Play and Writer Hide.

By Jimmy Fidler.

Hollywood, July 10.

Sorry to spoil one of the slickest dodges I have encountered in many a moon, but it's too good to keep. Bob Armstrong tells me that one of the contract writers at a certain studio covers up his periodical binges by using a very simple system. Each morning when his secretary comes to work and finds her boss A. W. O. L., she drags out a spare coat and hat that he keeps in his office closet and hangs them on the rack. Then, if any of the executives drop in to see him, she has this stock alibi: "He must be here. His coat and hat are hanging on the rack, so I suppose he's somewhere on the lot."

Why couldn't I have thought of a gag like that during the years I worked for a studio?

Apparently even as polite a youngster as Shirley Temple can be surfeited by the cooing inanities that so many adults consider proper fare for pretty children. I was chatting with "Curley Top" and her mother on the set today when a gushy visiting matron barged up. "And what is this little girl's name?" she beamed.

Shirley studied gravely. "You already know!" she said.

I wasn't there, but those who were swear it's the sober truth. And if it is I stand ready to take back half of the unflattering remarks I have ever made about her majesty, the Garbo. Seems that an M.-G.-M. writer gave a Bohemian party and impulsively invited Greta. To everyone's surprise, she appeared, clad in sweater and slacks, and proved the life of the party—which was quite an achievement, for the party, from all accounts, was very lively. As a farewell gesture, the guests devised a game called "Sitting in Garbo's lap;" and the Great One blandly permitted each one to perch for a moment on her knee. Maybe the queen has her lighter moods, after all.

I met the proudest 10-year-old in Hollywood today. Her name is Gladys Raeber and her father, an airline executive, recently purchased a new home near the Temple mansion. No sooner were they established in the new house than Gladys over-ruled her mother's pessimism, rang the Temple doorbell and asked if Shirley could come out and play. "What happened?" I asked, knowing the care with which Shirley is guarded.

"Why," Gladys said, "she came out and we played."

Every time I enter a certain building on the Boulevard I notice a parade of well-dressed young girls, each one with her face swathed in gauze bandages, scurrying in and out of the elevators. The other day I investigated and discovered that they are patients of a plastic surgeon who has made a fortune by reshaping the noses of would-be stars. Studios send their young hopefuls to him and he snips, lengthens or straightens as per her individual order.

Apparently no one can lose by a nose in the race for screen fame.

A magazine writer asked Bob Burns so many personal quetions that "Robin" grew a bit weary and, as he told me later, "I sort of shut her up. She asked me if the people in Van Buren were anything like the characters in 'Tobacco Road,' and I said, 'Lady, where I come from, the characters in that play would represent the Country Club set—you'd have to be a social climber to get in!'"

Stars get little sympathy from their publicity men these days. The other day a well-known Adonis walked sadly into the office of his press agent and slumped down in a chair. "I've wrecked my car, had a fight with my girl, had a bout with the flu and been sued by an ex-landlord—all within one week," he moaned.

"Okay," retorted the press agent, "And what of it? They mentioned your last picture every time you made the headlines, didn't they?"

Hollywood Drops Its Shyness

At the Metropolitan this week, in proof, Nero Wolfe, in the person of Walter Connolly, safely ensconced amid the comforts of his own apartment, confounds the powers of evil, as personified by that master protagonist of all the world's villainies, Eduardo Ciannelli, and a week later on the same screen Donald Woods, former leading man of the National Theater Players, will cause Perry Mason to solve the complex matter of "The Case of the Stuttering Bishop." So members of the Crime Club may take heart.

The current week's attractions on local screens, however, do not run too much in the direction of perfected criminology. The tenor of the week seems to be, rather, one of music, laughter and gayety. To be sure, "Between Two Women" does not fall into the category of the laughmaker or the tune fashioner, but it is only a needed leavening for a series of bookings that includes the Marx Brothers in "A Day at the Races," Dick Powell in "The Singing Marine," Laurel and Hardy in "Way Out West" and other items that lean a little on the side of levity.

This is precisely the season of the year when such a condition ought to prevail—the so-called "silly season." Let us be grateful that it does. Profundity and perspiration somehow just don't seem to go together.

has lived there much of his life and is an expert swimmer, diver and surf-boarder. He also knows the South Sea Island natives as no one who has not lived among them ever could.

The producer's second reason was the positive belief, born of his long and successful experience, that in "The Hurricane" he has a star-building picture. The story, published serially in a national magazine and in book form, has been read by millions. It possesses all the elements of romance, drama and glamorous background which spell popular appeal and, topping all these, magnificent spectacle.

Goldwyn figured that by placing an established name player in the Terangi role, he would, of course, have a great picture. By giving that part to an unknown he would still have a great picture and a new star. Needless to say, Jon Hall is under long-term contract.

"The Hurricane," incidentally, also should do much to boost the stellar rating of Dorothy Lamour, who is cast as the native heroine, Marama. Although longer in pictures than Hall, Miss Lamour is a comparative newcomer who made her debut about a year ago in "The Jungle Princess." She appeared in "Swing High, Swing Low," and "High Wide and Handsome" and in "The Last Train From Madrid," but is getting her first outstanding "break" in "The Hurricane."

Miss Lamour is under contract to Paramount, so if "The Hurricane" builds her into a full-blown star, Goldwyn will receive no direct benefit except to the production's prestige. He will, however, be more than satisfied.

Back Yards

while most of the stars are fully capable of caring for their own homes and cooking their own suppers, they usually do exactly what the rest of America does on the maid's day off.

Which means they go out to dinner. A long queue of children, aged men and women, young and middle aged folk, can always be found outside the Brown Derby on Thursday night. Sometimes they "get" Luise Rainer. Sometimes they "bag" a Warren William signature for their collection, or even Charles Laughton or Myrna Loy.

They rarely come home empty-handed. Their game-pockets bulge with trophies of the chase. And the spirit of the chase never leaves them.

Friday is the biggest night in the week. Friday night the lid is off. Police keep hunters moving in front of the Hollywood Legion Stadium, but even so the sidewalk is packed with a greater attendance than the fights themselves.

A fan has to be fast on his feet Friday night. He has to know exactly the right moment to wriggle an autograph book and fountain pen through the tangle of his competitors at Robert Taylor, Gable, Gloria Swanson, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Bruce Cabot and swarms of others.

Saturday your Hollywood fan clusters in groups at the Philharmonic concerts. Rich fans surround such stars as Norma Shearer, Myrna Loy, Luise Rainer, Lionel Barrymore, Reginald Owen and Una Merkel in the lobby or in the aisles. Their poorer fellow-hunters wait outside for the entr'acte exodus.

Fans with cars go to the polo games on Sunday. Fans without cars bide their time until night falls and the Trocadero lights begin to glow.

They know that they are always pretty sure of trapping Elissa Landi, Freddie Bartholomew, Robert Montgomery and Bruce Cabot somewhere about the polo field. And that if they miss them there, they can get them at the Troc that night, with maybe Allan Jones, Guy Kibbee, Melvyn Douglas and Madge Evans thrown in, to boot.

A rough computation places the fan army at about 500,000; their daily ink output as 18 gallons, and the weight of their autograph collections, swelling daily, at around 300 tons.

'Wells Fargo' Role To Lionel Barrymore

Lionel Barrymore will play a featured role in Frank Lloyd's "cavalcade" of American transportation, "Wells Fargo," Paramount studios made known last week.

Thus the famous actor joins a stellar cast already headed by Joel McCrea, Bob Burns and Frances Dee. The picture, to be produced and directed by Lloyd, will go into production this month with an eight- or ten week shooting schedule.

Familiar Drama Will Be Offered By Blackfriars

"Smilin' Thru," familiar to many theatergoers through the stellar performances of Jane Cowl, Norma Talmadge and Norma Shearer, and familiar to local drama lovers through last season's production by the Blackfriars Guild, will be given this year for the second time at the National Sylvan Theater in the Monument Grounds Tuesday night, July 13, by the Blackfriars, under the direction of Mary K. Crowley.

The same excellent cast of principals will appear in leading roles in this sentimental drama by Allah Langdon Martin, whose scenes are laid in Ireland, in prewar and postwar times. Stephen Trodden plays the part of the spirited but revengeful lover, Jeremy Wayne; also that of his son, Kenneth Wayne. In the Blackfriars production two different actresses will appear in what was formerly considered a dual role; Margaret Myers playing Kathleen, and Nell Orton playing Moonyeen.

Arthur Van will appear as John Carteret; Edgar Kloten, as Dr. Owen Harding; Gordon Potter, as Willie Ainley; Dorothy Davidson, as Ellen, and Marguerite Nordstrom as Mary Clare.

Who has become one of the Capital's most popular dance orchestra conductors by his "swingy" programs in the Spanish Garden Ballroom at Glen Echo Park. He is leading personally this season for the first time.

Whose picture, "The Little Colonel," is one of the current revivals on the screen at the Rialto Theater. Miss Temple is posed here as "The Age of Innocence."

Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Taylor Reverse Form By Admitting Their Long 'Romance' Really Is Love

Most movie people insist they're no more than "just friends" up to the very moment of the wedding, but Mr. Taylor and Miss Stanwyck are different. They admit that they are simply ca-razy about each other. Both like the outdoors, ranch life and horses.

Other Stars Confess Only Friendship, Develop Tongue-in-Cheek Impediment

By Paul Harrison.

Besides the popularity of the people involved, there is a good reason why Hollywood's No. 1 romance is between Robert Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck—they don't mind admitting that they're in love.

Now there are Clark Gable and Carole Lombard: When either is interviewed (by appointment made through the publicity departments) correspondents are cautioned in advance that love is not to be brought into the conversation. Of course, sometimes a reporter will blurt out silly query No. 27: "Are you and Mr. Gable planing marriage?"

Miss Lombard, who can blush at will, will blush and exclaim: "Why, how perfectly absurd! Cl—ah—Mr. Gable and I are merely friends. I don't know where all this romance talk comes from!"

It's the same with Sonja Henie and Tyrone Power, and so on through the list. Merely friends. They're all just good pals, to hear them talk. Some of the stars do so much talking with tongue in cheek that they are beginning to develop impediments of speech. There is a rumor that Jeanette MacDonald, who marrid Gene Raymond on June 15, responded absent-mindedly when his name was mentioned: "Mr. Raymond and I are merely good friends."

Knows His Mind.

But Taylor—there's a man who knows his own mind! He'll come right out and say, "Sure, I'm crazy about the gal!"

Mis Stanwyck, restrained by more years of exposure to the Hollywood tradition of reticence, will go miles out of her way to avoid use of the word "love." But then, what can a girl say who isn't formally engaged?

Here's what she said: "I liked Bob from the first. He had a quality of genuineness that is mighty rare in Hollywood. We seemed to get along from the very beginning."

At the very beginning, though, Taylor was going about with Irene Hervey. He first met Miss Stanwyck at a party given nearly two years ago by Mrs. Zeppo Marx, wife of the actress' agent. This was shortly after the release of "Magnificent Obsession" but before the film caught the fans' favor and assured stardom for the leading man.

Neither of them remembers much about that meeting except that they talked a while and were mutually impressed. Not until after they had played together in "His Brother's Wife" did they decide that they were something more than friends.

Miss Stanwyck again: "As we went together we discovered that we enjoyed so many things in common. That helps, you know.

Both Like Horses.

"Bob likes horses and riding, and so do I. He likes cars, and so do I. He likes music, and at the same time he enjoys sports. So do I. He likes the theater and movies, and working in the movies. We're together on those, too.

"You asked if we will be married. Well, we haven't got any plans. If we are going to be married, the future alone knows it. But one way or the other I'm confident that our friendship is going to continue."

That's the way Miss Stanwyck talks. It isn't surprising that neither she nor Taylor mentions the one perfectly obvious reason for their avoidance of marriage plans. The reason is their careers, particularly his career.

Miss Stanwyck has been married once, to Frank Fay. She was 30 years old on July 16. She is a top-notch star, and in recent months has been the busiest actress in Hollywood. From "Banjo on My Knee" she rushed into "The Plough and the Stars." Before the latter picture was finished she went to Paramount for "Internes Can't Take Money."

Before that picture was completed she started working part-time in "This Is My Affair," with Taylor. And during the last weeks of "My Affair" she was skipping to United Artists for costume fittings and tests for Samuel Goldwyn's forthcoming production of "Stella Dallas."

All this activity is no tribute to a mere glamour-girl, but to a finished actress. Maybe it wouldn't make much difference to the fans if she married again.

Definitely Glamorous.

But Taylor definitely is a glamour-guy. He is just 26. He never has been married. There's no telling how many thousands of heartaches—the kind that give exhibitors a sinking feeling in the boxoffice—would be caused if he took a wife.

Even more pertinent is the fact that Taylor's new contract—offered and signed when it became clear that he was destined to become one of the Nation's top palpitators—provides that he shall not marry. Unless there is an adjustment of this agreement he cannot, with his studio's blessing, marry within the next six years.

Most of the screen colony's amateur psychologists believe that Miss Stanwyck originally was drawn to Taylor by a protective, maternal urge. He was pretty green. And she has seen a lot of show business and its tricky angles since the days when, as Ruby Stevens, she danced the Charleston in Broadway's Club Anatole.

The two seem far apart temperamentally. Ruby Stevens had to fight every step of the way upward from an unhappy, orphaned childhood. Taylor wandered, wide-eyed, into stardom. She is crisp, utterly self-efficient and has few friends. Taylor trusts and likes everybody. Or used to.

"Bob says that the best thing I do is deflate his ego," Miss Stanwyck laughed.

Everybody believes she has been a leavening influence in his career so far. During the recording of her voice in "I Hum a Waltz" for "This Is My Affair," Taylor was sitting in the orchestra with the cello players. He chose that spot because he used to saw a pretty mean cello himself. He sat with head in hands and gazed as though hypnotized at the girl before the recording microphone.

She stopped suddenly in the middle of the number and cried: "Bob Taylor, if you don't stop looking at me like a mooing cow I'm going to walk right out of here! You come out of that orchestra so I won't see you while I'm trying to sing." He went.

There always is a good deal of cupidity involved when a studio plays Cupid, and the teaming of Taylor and Miss Stanwyck by Twentieth Century-Fox was a pretty obvious stroke of romantic inflation. "This Is My Affair" is a crime tale of the McKinley era, but it has been liberally sprinkled with love scenes for the principals.

The pair seldom go to big parties, and almost never to night clubs. Neither gives parties. Most of their free time is spent together alone—motoring, riding horseback and planning work on their neighboring, but not adjacent, ranches in the San Fernando Valley.

Miss Stanwyck's ranch is owned in partnership with the Zeppo Marxes. They're going to raise horses. The actress also is building a house on the place.

Taylor Owns Ranch.

Taylor became a ranch owner pretty much by accident. One day on a location trip he commented idly that he'd like to have a cow pony. It was just as though you'd say, "I wish I had an elephant"—or a dirigible, or a fire truck.

But the wishes of movie stars are taken seriously. The next day Taylor had two cow ponies. He was obliged to keep them because they were gifts. So he hired a man, one Howard Rygaard, to take care of them. A few days later Taylor and Miss Stanwyck were perched on a corral fence admiring his horses when the actor noticed a beautiful gaited mare in an adjoining lot. "That's a fine mare," said Taylor.

"Man wants a thousand bucks," said Rygaard.

"My God!" exclaimed Taylor, and thought no more about it until he visited the place a few days later and found the mare stabled with his cow ponies. Rygaard explained jubilantly that he had attended an auction and had bought the mare for only $450. He knew that Mr. Taylor wanted her, and so——

And so Taylor bought a ranch. Having three horses and a trainer-groom, there wasn't much else he could do. Now he's going to have lots of horses, and a house. But no wife. Not for a few years, anyhow.

Barbara stopped in the middle of a scene and told Taylor to "stop looking at me like a mooing cow!"

Screen Life in Hollywood

By Hubbard Keavy.

Hollywood.—The house that Joan Blondell and Dick Powell have settled down in, out in Beverly Hills, I would describe as a chorus girl's idea of heaven. But, then, I'm no authority on interior decorating.

Maybe you'd like it. It's a little too frilly for me. Too much color. Too many gadgets. No place to put your feet except the floor.

There are many furnishings from Dick's bachelor house, but Joan's feminine touch, exemplified in the frilly drapes and elaborate curtains and flowered wall paper, is evident everywhere.

"We got along splendidly," grins Dick. "Joan had her ideas—and kept them. I had mine—and kept some of them. We are both represented in the final result and we both like it."

The house is old English in architecture. I won't attempt to describe it in detail. The dining room, for instance, is modernistic in design and carpeted in deep red. The chairs are covered with red satin. The living room is carpeted in solid green, wall paper of old English design, showing large red flowers on a white background. The fireplace, at one end, is lined with mirrors.

There is a playroom, done in imitation of an old log cabin with beamed ceilings and wooden walls which hold many trophies. A small piano, a bar, games and slot machines make this one of the most inviting rooms in the house. The master bedroom is something. It really is three rooms thrown into one. A pale blue carpet sets off a variety of furnishings, chosen apparently for comfort and convenience. There are two full size double beds, modified Colonial four posters, set at different angles in the rambling room. The wall paper also is flowered and the windows are trimmed with draped curtains of dotted swiss.

Theater Jargon Is Discarded By Hollywood

By the Associated Press.

Picture-makers, anxious to keep the film public trusting, doting and true to its illusions, are fastening pretty names to touchy subjects.

The rash of euphemisms has twisted the old jargon of the theater so much that an old trouper wouldn't recognize the tongue.

The word "retake," for example, has an ugly sound and suggests something unfortunate happened during the making of the picture. Maybe the star was hammier than anticipated. However, certain scenes may have been so good the director wanted them amplified. Regardless of the reason, it is safer to call the retake an "expansion."

There have been other notable instances of changing the actors' lexicon. The old tags are fast disappearing. A "soubrette" is virtually a dodo. "Leading Lady" is better. "Soubrette" gave the suggestion of a well-worn, obese exingenue insistent on remaining cute and frisky.

Plays used to be "tried out on the dog"—offered timidly to small-town audiences. Now, the play is given a "dress rehearsal" or a "repetition generale" and suburbanites feel much happier about it.

They have not been able to do much with the old explanation that actor Joe Doakes "is resting"—a mild way of saying he is dining on hard-tack and haunting casting offices. Motion picture writers are dipping their pens in bilge-water. The cycle of sea pictures is in full blast.

Advance guard of this current concentration on marine fields is "Captains Courageous," the saga of Rudyard Kipling's so realistic and authentic pictorially that audiences reach for their handkerchiefs to remove the salt spray.

Twentieth Century-Fox is about to release "Slave Ship," in which Wallace Beery is portrayed as a not-very-ethical dealer in "Black Ivory."

Samuel Goldwyn is considering making "The Pirate's Lady," with Gary Cooper as the pirate.

Paramount has three marine pictures in the making, "Souls at Sea," co-starring Gary Cooper and George Raft; "The Buccaneer," starring Fredric March, and "Ebb Tide," from the work by Robert Louis Stevenson.

It looks like a wet summer.

Now is the time of year when the studios keep their blonde investments in the shade and advise the brunette actresses they do not have to be quite so careful about sunburn.

Dr. Harry Nardini, of the Hollywood Hospital, gives a slightly different twist to the 1937 edition of the annual prescription.

Dark haired persons with blue or light brown eyes are just as susceptible to blistering as blondes, he said. He also issued this warning:

"Avoid sudden strenuous sports and remember you are only as young as your arteries."

Reel stuff: Ruby Mercer, New York opera singer, is under contract at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but the studio hasn't decided just what it will do with her . . . A symphony orchestra of marionettes, created by Russell Patterson, is going through its paces in the miniature stage at Paramount for the musical extravaganza "Artists and Models" . . . In the same miniature room, they are busy sinking a ship. Workmen rock a model of a dismantled and storm-tossed square-rigger from side to side while two others slosh its prow with buckets of water.

The name of a pretty young lady from Minneapolis, who may sing in "The Desert Song," in an important role, certainly will be changed . . . It's Aba Gjerset . . . Either the G or the J is silent . . . Ida Lupino asks "How can you play love scenes if the peak of your own romance is past?" . . . "I think an actress should always be in love" . . . Well, isn't she? . . .

Weekly Digest of SCIENCE and INVENTION

Not only medical and scientific experts, but laymen as well, will be interested in the recent announcement by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology at the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., that our heads and the brains that are in them are growing bigger and bigger as the years roll on—and that with bigger heads to accommodate bigger brains, our brains are better, too.

Dr. Hrdlicka arrived at his conclusions through measuring the heads of living members of the National Academy of Sciences. His investigation, for purposes of comparison, also took in the heads of "old Americans," with at least three generations of American ancestry in their blood. Up to 50 or 60 years of age, he found, the heads of men and women are increasing in length and breadth and are proportionately larger than the skulls of persons who lived one or two centuries ago.

Dr. Frederick Tilney, professor of neurology and neuro-anatomy at the Columbia University School of Medicine, New York City, supports Dr. Hrdlicka by declaring that a dome-like forehead to accommodate a huge brain, developed in response to modern civilization's increasingly complex demands, may be the next step in human evolution.

The human brain is not yet a finished product, according to Dr. Tilney, who points out that the brain of today simply represents millions of years of groping progress from the first rudimentary brains of fish through the successive stages of amphibian, reptilian, bestial, arboreal and, finally, erect life.

"Since his earliest beginnings, man has grown in humanity as his brain has expanded and his forehead has risen above his eyes," says Dr. Tilney. "Such a conclusion seems irresistible when placed side by side with the brain-casts of the ape-man of Java, the dawn-man of Piltdown, the Rhodesian, the Neanderthal and the Modern, which demonstrate his steady brain expansion.

"The brain area in which the greatest development has occurred is the frontal lobe. Its progressive growth since the frontal lobe made its first appearance gives an accurate impression of the manner in which the brain has responded to the increasing demands made upon it. There are no indications that these demands will decrease in their urgency as times goes on.

"This fact seems to point in a hopeful direction. It seems equally certain that upon the average only a relatively small fraction of the human brain is at present utilized to the most effective advantages in the interest of humanity. This condition would seem to mean that the power is in our hands to bring into play much more of the brain's potential energy than we have yet developed. In addition to these considerations, the human cerebrum may still be looked upon as in its early youth. By most of us it is regarded as a finished product, but its long prehistoric record, as we know it, does not support this view.

"This long record makes it appear likely that the brain of modern man is only some intermediate stage in the ultimate development of the master organ of life; and, furthermore, all the evidence which is available from the long primate and mammalian history of the brain conveys the strong impression that the evolutionary process has not come to an end, with modern man as its culminating phase."

But bigger heads and bigger brains are not a sure guarantee of better brains, according to Prof. Donald A. Laird, director of the psychological laboratory at Colgate University. He points out that education and intelligence are not the same thing and that one may have a high degree of intelligence and practically no education. Brains help us to acquire education, but only when, and if, we use them.

Just what it is that gives one man the fire of genius and another just ordinary intelligence is a question for which science has long sought the answer. What is the essential difference between the brain of a genius and the brain of the average individual? Is it a matter of cranial bumps? Of convolutions? Of brain fissures? Of brain capacity? Of the actual size of the brain? Of brain weight?

Prof. Henry A. Donaldson, of the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology, Philadelphia, is of the opinion that in this line of investigation scientists are nearer an answer to these questions than they have ever been.

"Broadly speaking," says Prof. Donaldson, "the driving power behind the brain is blood. The brain, like a muscle, works better with an ample suply of blood. So at last we have a partial reason why one brain functions better than another."

Our Brains Grow Bigger —and Better

"Not Yet a Finished Product," Scientists' Verdict After Long Study

Interesting comparison between the sizes of the brains and the sizes of the faces of a fish, a horse, an ape and a man.

An impulse presses the button (1), which closes the connection at (2), and the electric current then is transmitted through (3) to the mechanism (4), which controls the required action (5). The accompanying dotted lines indicate how the brain transmits required wave impulses through the medium of a switchboard to sight (a), through the background of the eye (b) and "bump of knowledge" (c). The seat of knowledge, represented at (d), receives, develops and transmits impulses from the switchboard (e). At the switchboard, arranged like a telephone exchange, impulses are transmitted as required to the glands (F), the muscles (G), the mind (H), and also to the head (I), the legs (J) and the arms (K). The numbers in circles represent the mechanism of the human brain, and the numbers in triangles represent the very similar mechanism of an electric alarm bell.

Miss Margaret Foltz, University of Rochester student, aids in the testing of the new brain-wave recorder devised by Dr. Leonard Carmichael, head of the university's department of psychology, which amplifies a million-fold the minute electrical currents generated in the brain cells of the living human subject and records them on a moving photographic film, left.

Dr. W. E. Chamberlain, professor of radiology and roentgenology, Temple University, demonstrating the mechanism of the remarkable new glass brain which he and Dr. Temple Fay, head of the department of neurology, have perfected. The glass brain has been described as a mechanism that makes plain the functioning of the human brain.

Tonal SPEED

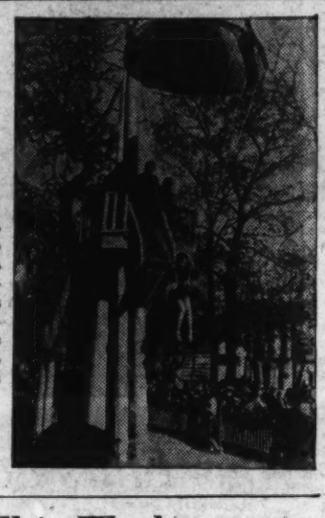
Dr. Owen Perrine, New York sound-wave expert, has been conducting a series of experiments with the human voice. He has found that "S" and "F" are the weakest sounds in the English language; "O" is the strongest. Ordinary voice waves travel 1,000 feet a second in the open and 186,000 miles a second in radio broadcasts.

At Home in Air.

Albert Emanuel, 13, of New York, claims the title of America's youngest flyer. He has been piloting a plane since he was 9 and has just completed a stiff program at the Miami, Fla., air meet.

Toy Parachute for Soviet Children

Even the children in Russia are now being taught how to use a parachute. Here is a photograph of the newest attraction built in the children's park at Moscow. It is a parachute tower. There is always an instructor on duty who prepares the little parachutes for the jump.



Wizard Juggles Millions of Volts

Playing with 1,500,000 volts of leaping electricity, Kenneth Strickfadden, the noted electrical wizard, is shown here demonstrating, at Los Angeles, Calif., how he handles them. As a plaything, this enormous voltage is not recommended for popular use, because the handling of it requires the utmost caution.

BOLL WEEVIL "COCKTAILS"

Brooksville, Fla., July 10 (AP).—The boll weevil's thirst at the cocktail hour may lead to the revival of once-prosperous Sea Island cotton growing in the Southern Coastal States.

Growers in this section are experimenting, with Federal Government aid, in the weevil's taste for sweet drinks on hot afternoons.

When old man weevil steps out on the cotton stalk for his regular snifter he is liable to get "knocked into a cocked hat" by the sweet liquid his palate craves.

Experimental mopping of plants with poisoned sirup in the last two years has led growers and farm experts here to believe a way has been found to control and possibly eradicate the cotton pest.

Sea Island cotton, pink blossomed, longer in staple and higher in price, is more susceptible to boll weevil damage than short-staple upland cotton. When the pest arrived in 1917, Sea Island cotton growing was practically wiped out.

New Trainer Used.

Development of an improved Link trainer, the miniature airplane for scientific training of pilots in instrument navigation, has been announced by W. A. Patterson, President of United Air Lines.

Five of the devices are being placed at divisions points on United Air Lines' coast-to-coast system.

SAFETY FIRST for Bees

Dr. F. K. Boettcher, Berlin scientist, has announced the discovery that certain chemical substances employed to combat vegetable and animal parasites on plants are harmful to any bees that happen to rest on plants so treated. Writing in Angewandte Chemie (Applied Chemistry) he warns against the use of arsenic compounds because of their deadly effect on honey bees. Nicotine pyrethrum and derris are suggested, as these substances do not harm the bees to any great extent; or at least, do not kill them wholesale. Copper solutions are not considered dangerous for bees while ferro-vitriol and sulphate of lime scare bees away from plants.

Obstacles to TELEVISION

New York (AP).—Just what are those obstacles to public television in the United States the men behind the research are always talking about?

They can be summed up thus:

"Major obstacles are no longer in the field of research and engineering. They lie in a new domain.

"Television now demands the creation of a new art-form, allied with, yet distinctive from the arts of the stage, motion picture and sound broadcasting. It requires new talent, new technique of writing, direction and studio control.

"Television must build net works, and justify an economic base capable of supporting an expensive program service.

"Solution of these problems will one day make television a major industry."

The statement is that of David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, one of the country's leaders in radio sight development, both in the laboratory and afield.

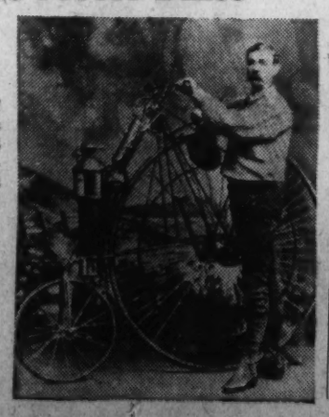
Apparently he had something of this situation in mind when he indicated at the signing of a contract for a special New York World's Fair Radio-Television building that right now it was "two years to television" for the public.

He didn't use exactly those words, but he did say that whatever the research status of television, "we propose to demonstrate to the public at the World's Fair the workings and the possibilities of television." The fair opens in 1939.

It is considerably too early to outline definite plans for this continuing demonstration, but the fair building is to be linked directly to the picture transmitter now operating on a field test schedule in the Empire State Building so that it can "televise outstanding World's Fair events." The field tests are being conducted in co-operation with NBC, which is developing the program end of sight broadcasting.

Meanwhile, NBC is expected to have under way by fair time its own television transmitter, which it has ordered for installation in the Chrysler Building. The equipment will be that of the RCA system.

First of the Motor Bikes



An odd-looking forerunner of the modern motor bicycle is this steam bike built in 1885 and belonging to L. D. Copeland, of Philadelphia, Pa. It was not a success because cyclists in those days were heavily fined if they rode on such vehicles unless a "guard" rode or walked 50 feet ahead, waving a danger flag.

Milestones of SCIENCE

A new method of aging brandy within six days by treating it with minutely powdered silver has been reported to the American Chemical Society. The brandy is passed through an ionic silver sterilizer, thereby attaining "a flavor of rather smooth, delicate character," according to the inventors, E. A. Beavans, H. E. Goresline and E. K. Nelson, of the U. S. Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, at Washington, D. C.

Soviet Russia is going into the "dollar watch" industry. A factory is being constructed at Samara, on the Volga, where 10,000 workers will be employed in the manufacture of cheap watches and alarm clocks. Thirty Swiss watchmakers from Le Locle and La Chaux de Fonds, the main watch and clock making centers in the canton of Neuchatel, have reached Samara as the advance guard of a selected body of watchmakers who are to superintend the production of Russia's dollar watches.

The old garden spade is taking on a new form. The new spade will be known as a leveling spade and must not be confused with the spade fork.

The use of a new type of insulin, known as protamine, has made it possible for all diabetics to lead a normal life, according to Mary Jane Henderson, therapeutic dietitian at Mount Siani Hospital, New York City. The new insulin, developed in Denmark out of a compound consisting of insulin and a substance extracted from the sperm of rainbow trot, acts as a protective agent over a much longer period of time than other types of insulin. It has a blade ending in three prongs with which even the hardest ground can be penetrated.

New GRAFTING IDEAS

Horticulturists in the Department of Agriculture at Washington have been making an intensive study of grafting and budding of fruit trees and have gone back 2,000 years with the result that the newest formula is to graft at the bottom instead of the top for the best results. Instead of grafting top portions that bear fruit, the new experiments are aimed at developing stronger stocks and roots.

Shaken CEMENT

The Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture has been laying concrete sidewalks by the vibration method at Arlington, Va. The vibrators work on somewhat the same principle as those used in giving beauty treatments. Vibrating the concrete as it is laid increases its strength about 10 per cent.

Program for Latin-Americans To Be Broadcast From Boston

Inauguration of a new venture in the radio field with a series of educational and cultural programs designed especially for Latin-American listeners and broadcast from this country through the short-wave facilities of the World Wide Broadcasting Foundation of Boston was announced here recently by Dr. L. S. Rowe, director general of the Pan-American Union, and Walter S. Lemmon, president of the foundation. It was stated that the series, a co-operative project of the union and the foundation, would be started in the early fall, with rebroadcasts of the same programs at later dates by stations throughout Latin-America.

Purpose of the series is two-fold, it was stated, to improve knowledge of each of the American republics in all the others, and in this way give practical effect to the resolutions and conventions adopted and signed at recent inter-American conferences with the object of promoting Pan-American cultural, educational and artistic co-operation.

The scope and nature of the programs has been carefully worked out after extensive research work which has been quietly carried on for nearly a year in all the Latin-American republics, and the broadcasts will thus be built to reflect accurately the requirements and desires of the radio audiences in those countries.

Educators Co-operating.

The projected series approaches the problem of inter-American broadcasting from an entirely new angle, it was revealed, as they will be prepared with the active support and direct collaboration of prominent Latin-American educators and leaders in the field of cultural thought. The programs will therefore present the viewpoints and interests of diversified groups throughout Latin-America.

To insure the best possible reception of the program by Latin-American listeners, the foundation is constructing an additional series of beam antennas to focus the high-power waves of W1XAL toward the South American continent. These antennas act like searchlight beams, whose width can be varied depending upon the area to be covered. For a wide section of the globe, represented by Latin-America, it may be necessary to utilize separate beams, one for Central America, Mexico and the west coast of South America, and another for the eastern scetion of South America.

Activities Extended.

Up to this time the foundation has been largely directing its efforts toward the development of educational programs for listeners in Europe and other parts of the English-speaking world. The projected series of programs will therefore represent the extension of the activities of the foundation into a new and important field.

The announcement of the projected series of programs coincides with the ratification by the United States Senate of various treaties signed at the recent Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace at Buenos Aires, some of which are designed to promote closer educational, cultural and artistic co-operation in the Americas. The broadcasts will also carry out directly the recommendations of that conference that the radio be used as widely as possible to create inter-American understanding along cultural lines.

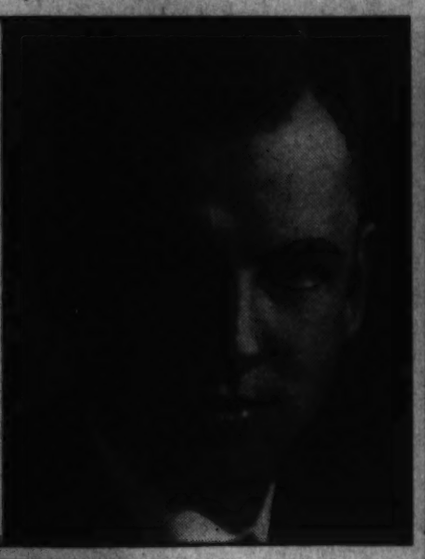
Who's Who Among Washington's Radio Announcers

ARTHUR BROWN.

Arthur William Brown . . . known to thousands of Washingtonians as "Art" . . . comes from a small town in New York . . . Granville . . . where, on December 15, 1898, he made his appearance on this planet . . . a big, bouncing 8-pounder . . . At the early age of four, just after the turn of the century, Art's family moved to Burlington, Vt., where he spent his childhood days . . . He was graduated from Burlington High School and matriculated at the University of Vermont . . . but the Army called . . . and we find Art enlisting at the first call, having completed less than a half year at the university . . . he joined the cavalry . . . but the very next day . . . the outfit became the 110th artillery band . . . and they taught Art to play a saxophone . . . in five easy lessons . . . "I was the worst player in the Army," he says . . . the boys were sent to Camp Jackson, at Columbia, S. C. . . . where he became the musical director at the Liberty Theater . . . no pay . . . but free movies . . . Art was honorably discharged from the Army four months after the Armistice . . . and left for Boston, where he immediately proceeded to get lost in the big city . . . soon thereafter he left for home . . . he became associated with a New York "local-talent" theatrical producer, and traveled from city to city producing amateur shows . . . and every chance he got he sought out the local theater and sat for hours at the organ . . . practicing . . . Art claims that 94 per cent of his education came from the Pullman car traversing from coast to coast . . . he got on well with the organ . . . and wound up with a post-graduate course with Lew White, well-known organist . . . Art joined forces with Paramount and played the organ in movies on their chain . . . while in Charlottsville, Va., where he went to open a new house, he was induced to visit Richmond, where he remained to work for an independent theater . . . and soon began working for Station WRVA, Richmond, as announcer and organist . . . remained here for three and a half years . . . soon went to work for WTAR, Norfolk, where he was heard by Leroy Marks, of WOL, and was soon brought to Washington . . . he came here in November, 1935, has played at the Loew's Capitol and is often called by them to do organ bits . . . Art is heard on many featured WOL programs, which include the Morning Musical Clock, Community Sing, Chernerville Varieties, Sunday Morning Revue and his bi-weekly organ recital at the Loew's Capitol Theater.

HUGH MCILREVEY.

Washington's youngest and the National Broadcasting Co.'s youngest senior announcer is Hubert James McIlrevey. Born in Westchester, N. Y., in 1915, he will celebrate his twenty-second birthday this October. Hugh was educated at Roosevelt Prep in New York and at New York University, where he took academic courses. While a student at the university our little hero obtained a job with the Radio City guides . . . he lasted two weeks . . . before he was hired by the same organization as a junior executive . . . his next step was a position as an announcer in Radio City . . . for six months . . . then a visit to Philadelphia ended in another announcing job with WFIL in that city . . . in January of last year he arrived in the Nation's Capital and has been with WRC ever since . . . Mac has made several movie shorts for Paramount . . . while working as a guide in Radio City . . . one was a musical comedy and the other a narration . . . he was invited to appear with Lily Pons, Lawrence Tibbett, Rosa Ponselle and Ray Knight for a benefit Metropolitan Opera performance . . . he did a brief dramatic sketch . . . loves dramatics, and while a student at the Prep school was a member of the famed Westchester Players . . . at the age of 10 he journeyed to London and spent a half-year there . . . again in 1931 he took a trip to the British Isles . . . this time to Belfast, where his grandparents live today . . . while in Ireland he had a stellar role in the popular play "The Hottentot." . . . Mac has one of the most "big-leaguey" voices in radio . . . a rich, deep barytone . . . of course, Mac is still a bachelor . . . but he likes the young ladies here in Washington . . . he is known to the listeners of the National Radio Forum and Red River Valley . . . when Jack Benny appeared here in Washington last season, Hugh was chosen to do the work here . . . and enjoyed it very much . . . his pet hobby is movie photography . . . and he can be seen with his little set at all broadcasts waiting for some good "shots" . . . there is a little streak of the athletics in Mac, having played football with his Prep team until an injury put him on his back for six months . . . his ambition as a boy ran the gauntlet from a fireman all the way up . . . likes announcing best, however, and hopes to be N. B. C.'s European representative some day . . . his favorite comic strip is "Benny" and he likes non-fiction books . . . we predict a bright future for Mac.



LLOYD DENNIS.

Here's his full name . . . Lloyd Wesley Dennis, jr. . . . but never, never call him Junior or Wes . . . he does not like it . . . Denny was born . . . wait a minute . . . Lloyd was born in Pawtucket, R. I., in 1908 and has to wait until October before he has his twenty-ninth birthday . . . tall, good-looking and married and a Sigma Chi from Brown University . . . attended the Pawtucket High School and then Brown University where in his freshman year was a member of the freshman swimming and baseball teams . . . in his sophomore year, a radio job at the local station in Providence, WEAN, beckoned and he became an announcer . . . went to school in the day time and worked at the station at night . . . was graduated with an A.B. in English composition . . . and was still with the radio . . . joined with the WNAC group, which is associated with the Yankee network in 1932 . . . and went to Boston in 1932 with WHDH . . . here he worked as program director . . . this station was affiliated with the National Broadcasting Co. . . . worked there until the latter part of May of this year, when he was employed by WJSV here in Washington . . . Lloyd likes to listen to his radio in spare time . . . and his favorite program is the Alexander Woollcott broadcast . . . likes Ted Husing for sports and Harry Von Zell for commercials . . . has always wanted to be a writer or a newspaperman . . . and has written a full-length novel, which he has not published . . . recently a short-short story has resulted from a day-off from work . . . and he intends to send it away to a magazine . . . says he does not fear a rejection slip . . . this is his first stay in Washington . . . and says he likes the "South" . . . but has trouble understanding the "you-alls" . . . his favorite story concerns a little bird that sings outside his home in Chevy Chase . . . never heard the like of it back home . . . posseses a quick, charming smile and talks in crisp New England style . . . would rather listen to the music of Tommy Dorsey than to any other band . . . playing that type music . . .

JOHN HURLEY.

This young man wants to be a lawyer . . . a radio legal counselor . . . a son of the "Bean" City of Boston, John Joseph Hurley, was born on Friday, September 13, 1912 . . . we find John as a young man attending the Dorchester High School . . . and taking part in such extra-curricular activities as dramatics, debating, etc. . . . and when he entered Boston College . . . he added glee clubs and musical clubs to his retinue . . . as a freshman at college, John tried out for all sports . . . and then turned "sissy" . . . for he preferred the singing and acting to the sports . . . at the present time he is attending the Georgetown University Law School and will graduate at the completion of another year . . . upon graduation from Boston John came to Washington to work for the Department of Justice . . . in the fingerprint division . . . and it was here that John broke into radio . . . last year when the dramatic group of the Justice Department won the annual one-act-play contest featured by the Community Center . . . the players were invited to perform the act for the radio . . . it was broadcast over WMAL . . . and shortly thereafter John was called over for an audition for announcing . . . and as he says . . . "here I am" . . . here's one we dug up about him . . . he wrote sports for his school paper . . . seems like every radio announcer has been or wants to be a writer or newspaperman . . . Town Hall is this lad's favorite radio show . . . and we want you to know that John went to school with Fred Allen's cousin, Ed Herlihy, now an announcer at Radio City . . . and this is not the reason that John likes Fred's program the best, either . . . asked him who was his favorite announcer . . . and he thought and thought . . . but nothing came out of it . . . "they're all pretty good" . . . so we let it go at that . . . now that school is over for the summer, at least, John has tackled "Gone With the Wind" . . . he has read several chapters . . . and wants to pick the movie star who should play, etc., etc. . . . yep, John is a bachelor . . . but . . . he has a sweetheart.

Music of Prior To Match Plays Of Shakespeare

Modern Orchestrations Are Called for by Radio Audiences.

The music that accompanies the streamlined Shakespeare on the new N. B. C. series is the work of Maestro Will Prior. Confronted by a scarcity of what he considered proper music for radio production of Shakespeare, the slight, good-natured conductor locked himself in his study overnight and emerged with a completed score of original transition music for "Hamlet." Each week Prior writes scores for the Bard of Avon's plays.

"There is a great deal of music suitable for creation of moods for Shakespeare," says Prior, "but we couldn't use it because it would remind the listeners of some opera or play and destroy the illusion we tried to create."

Prior is using modern orchestrations, pointing out that if he were to attempt to give radio audience music as Shakespeare knew it, "we would have to use a lute instead of an orchestra, and have a singer."

Although human emotions haven't changed since the days of the Bard, Prior observes, the technique developed by modern music is as different as night from day.

"Stokowski orchestrates Bach in the modern manner and makes him sound utterly different and tremendous," he says.

"Were Bach or Beethoven alive today, I am sure they would be delighted to use modern instrumentations, just as Shakespeare would have been delighted to use modern dramatic technique employed by John Barrymore in the present series."

Sheila Barrett, Mimic, To Have Her Own Show

Sheila Barrett, personality mimic who has been guest starring on many programs this past season, will have her own show beginning October 3. With Joe Rines' orchestra and the veteran Graham McNamee as the master of ceremonies, Miss Barrett will be heard every Sunday night at 5 o'clock.

The new show is entitled "The Time of Your Life" and is sponsored by a watch company. Besides the members of the regular company there will be a guest vocalist and a quartet. The program will be of half an hour duration.

Club Receives Letter From Canton Island

An item of unusual historic and philatelic interest has just been received by the NBC Stamp Club in the form of an envelope bearing "Canton Island" cancellation and postmark, indicating it was canceled at the moment of the totality of the recent solar eclipse, 8:38 a. m., June 8, 1937. The envelope was posted aboard the U. S. S. Avocet, which carried an official United States postoffice.

The envelope, upon which a 25-cent blue trans-Pacific air mail stamp was used, was mailed to the NBC Club by W. R. Brown, an NBC engineer.

Pictorial Effect Is Grofe's Aim In His Self-Explanatory Music

Ferde Grofe, who at 5 played the piano with such talent that even the neighbors didn't mind his practicing, has something to say about modern music, especially as it is interpreted by himself.

"I want my music," he stated, "to be as vividly pictorial as a great painting. My chief aim is to present typically American scenes so indelibly in the mind's eye with my music that the listener will recognize that scene just as clearly as if he had actually seen it."

He points out that the listener can enjoy the music though he may not have had an elaborate musical background. This type music calls for no explanation outside itself. Among the composer's works that are rich in such unmistakable pictorial allusions are his widely known "Hollywood," "Grand Canyon," "Mississippi" and "Tabloid" suites. It will be recalled that when Grofe was playing in California immediately following the war, he met Paul Whiteman, then almost unknown. In 1919, when Grofe became Whiteman's pianist and arranger, which continued until 1933, the "jazz king" made his mark in the musical world.

It was also during this period that George Gershwin produced his "Rhapsody in Blue," which Grofe arranged so successfully.

Returning to the theme of Grofe's "painting" a picture with his music, one might recall the "Hollywood Suite." There is the unmistakable sound of rooms, portraying cleaning-up activities in the studios. As a matter of fact, several orchestra leaders in presenting that portion of the Grofe film-land composition have had their orchestra members use brooms to obtain a realistic swishing effect. Another graphic passage from the same suite portrays "Yes-man" answering a director, and the effect one gets from the music is indelibly the sound of a group of men saying "Yes" over and over again.

In other passages carpenters are heard putting up scenery; chorus girls are represented going through a precision number, and various stars come on the set.

The same type of musical picture is built up in the staccato musical effects of "Tabloid," which as its title declares, portrays the activities in a busy metropolitan newspaper plant. One hears the rush and swirl of the newsroom, the hoarse shouts of rewrite and copy desk men and the busy clatter of dozens of typewriters. Here again in search of the realism, orchestras actually have employed an array of typewriters to convey the "picture" of the scene. There is even a sequence that portrays a "sob-sister" at work, writing a headline story of a scene at the death house.

Perhaps the most pictorial of all is the "Grand Canyon Suite," which incorporates two of the most widely played pictorial excerpts heard in American music today. They are, of course, the familiar "On the Trail" sound of horses' hooves and the reverberating "cloudburst."

Grofe does all of his composing and arranging at his quiet Teaneck, N. J., estate. He eschews Broadway night life, but entertains lavishly at home. His pet hobby is amateur musicians and he is the adviser for the Teaneck High School band.

Also on the Key are Susanne Fisher, Shep Fields and the Kidoodlers. WMAL, at 1 p. m.

The melody of rose songs will include those he played on his first radio program in Boston 12 years ago. Helping to celebrate will be Ella Logan, who will be heard in "They Can't Take That Away From Me," and Pinky Tomlin, who is still up to his neck in romantic difficulties with "Saymore Saymore."

Radio Man Sifts 500 Air Ideas To Get Good One

Out of 500 ideas submitted to a radio station, one may be good for radio, according to Stewart Wells, C. B. S.'s "idea man." And it is Wells' job to find that one good idea out of the 500 useless ones.

Mr. Wells sits all day and interviews hundreds of people with ideas. He sees bank clerks, stenographers, ex-brokers, everybody who thinks he or she has something radio can use. He's talked to exotic people—a man who wanted to sail a Chinese junk from Hongkong to New York, an international spy, a United States prison inspector and even a murderer just released from jail who wanted to write about his life.

He listens very patiently to all these people. He studies their new radio ideas, even if they are only jotted down on the back of an old envelop. If he likes the idea, he'll make a memorandum of it, pass it on to the department that might be interested—musical ideas to the music department, etc. If the department likes the idea, he'll buy an option on it from the author and get the copyright angles of it searched.

A good radio idea may range anywhere from a new way to sing a song to a whole dramatic series with many episodes. The best radio ideas, he says, are those staring people in the face. The kind that makes people say, "Now why couldn't I have thought of that." Ideas for children's programs are the hardest to find.

He says that ideas come to him in bunches. The same idea seems to occur to different people at the same time. Once he had 20 different people in one week give him the suggestion that C. B. S. run an "Employment Bureau of the Air."

Dummy to Movies.

Charlie McCarthy, the saucy dummy who makes life a wooden nightmare for one W. C. Fields, will soon step from radio to motion pictures with his master, Edgar Bergen. On Charlie's behalf, Bergen has agreed to appear in Samuel Goldwyn's "Follies" with the dummy. It is reported that Charlie may also appear later this year in a motion picture with his mortal foe—Fields.

Radio Discovery Just Too Busy For Comedy Role

Joe Laurie, Valle Protege, Hasn't Had Time to Broadcast.

Radio's newest comedy discovery, Joe Laurie, jr., is the fellow who has been too busy to be a radio comedian. Laurie is the pride and joy of Rudy Vallee, who gave the jokester his start on his program. Laurie has been a vaudevillian, author, script writer, stage actor, columnist, so he just "hasn't had time." Right now, however, radio audiences have responded so well to his offerings that a bright future has been predicted for the comedian. He is currently featured on Vallee's Thursday night broadcasts.

Joe stands one inch over 5 feet, wears a checkered cap and smokes 12 to 15 cigars a day. Twenty-five years ago, he was a headliner in vaudeville and a stage star. He has made several occasional radio appearances in recent years without taking time out to consider himself a radio entertainer.

Was Stage Star.

When he was starring in a Chicago stage show, "The Gingham Girl," back in 1922, he was asked to appear on the radio to advertise the play. This, of course, was incidental. In subsequent vaudeville tours and stage appearances on the road, he went on the air, without pay, to oblige a local commentator or interviewer.

Recently he has been writing scripts for radio comedians on the West Coast. At the time he looked upon radio as "something which burned up jokes too fast."

Many invitations to appear as a guest star were offered to him, but he refused them. "I was too busy," he said. He was on one comedy show on the coast "to help the star out of a spot because a bit player had to cancel just before the show went on the air." For that appearance, he refused to accept money.

Author of Many Acts.

In Joe's spare time he has written hundreds of vaudeville acts, two movies—"Union Depot" and "Ten Grand," a column for a theatrical weekly and two books. Right now he is working on a book, "History of Vaudeville," which has taken seven years up to this point to near completion. Another book, "Here Lies Vaudeville," already has been completed. One gets an idea of what Joe likes best to write about from the title of his books.

Rudy Vallee happened to get hold of Laurie when he wasn't busy. The Broadway show that he had been playing in, "Swing Your Lady," had just finished its run.

W. C. Fields Gets a Laugh.

Program directors called for Frank Munn, tenor on a Sunday night broadcast, to start his rehearsal. Munn, standing near the control room with earphones over his head, chuckled and did not hear the directors. Munn continued chuckling, ignoring the signal. "What were you doing?" they asked him later on. He had been listening to W. C. Fields, broadcasting from Hollywood.

Musical Fete to End July 23 At Massanetta Springs, Va.

Outdoor Concert by Large Festival Choir Is Expected to Draw Audience of 5,000 on Final Day.

A crowd of from 3,000 to 5,000 is expected to attend the final day of the annual music festival at Massanetta Springs, four miles east of Harrisonburg, Va., July 23.

Closing the day's events will be the outdoor concert by the large Festival Choir, including some of the best singers from Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia. The setting as usual will be the slopes of Vesper Hill, while the audience will sit in the valley below. By gift of nature the acoustics of Vesper Hill are perfectly adjusted, making not only the voices, but also the most delicate shades of tone audible a mile away.

The white-clad singers will make their way to the hill in an impressive processional at 7:30 p. m., and after a brief introduction by one of the State's foremost musical leaders, will begin the concert just about the time the sun is sinking. As darkness creeps on, the hill will be illuminated with flood lights.

Mission of Choirs.

This day of musical attractions will open in the morning at 11 o'clock with an address on church music by Dr. John Finley Williamson, director of the festival choir and leader of the school of sacred music which will be in session at Massanetta Springs from July 19 to 25. Dr. Williamson as head of the famous Westminster Choir School, has compelled world-wide attention with the philosophy that choirs have a spiritual mission as powerful as that of any minister.

This will be followed at 11:30 by a Westminster Choir program, all soloists and directors being graduates of Dr. Williamson's school. Included on this program will be a concert by the choir of the Second Presbyterian Church of Roanoke, directed by Miss Jeanne Martin, and a group of solos by Leonard Phillips, minister of music in the Grace Covenant Presbyterian Church, Richmond; James Sydnor, minister of music in the Park Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, and Mrs. Sydnor; Miss Sybil Shover, popular contralto of the choir of the Presbyterian Church, Harrisonburg; Mrs. LoRean Hodapp, famous soprano of the Westminster Choir, and probably Caleb Cushing, head of the department of music, Shenandoah College, Dayton. A choir from Hagerstown, Md., under the direction of Raymond K. Hollinger, also is expected to participate.

State Musicians' Program.

Beginning the afternoon program at 1:45, Virginia composers who are present will be introduced and there will follow a program put on by musicians of the State. Mrs. Annabelle Reinburg, soprano, who has won for herself a reputation in the valley, also will sing a group of songs.

Although the program is incomplete, a number of choirs of the State are scheduled already to take part in this event. Included on this program will be the Front Royal Glee Club, directed by Mrs. Q. D. Gasque; the junior choir of the First Presbyterian Church, Lexington, directed by Miss Mary Monroe Penick, and probably the junior choir of Woodstock, directed by Mrs. Guy Benchoff.

At 3 p. m. the large festival choir will hold a rehearsal under the direction of Dr. John Finley Williamson. Simultaneously the contest for colored quartets singing Negro spirituals will be held on the lawn in front of Massanetta's modern hotel. After the contest various bands and orchestras of the valley will give an outdoor concert on the lawn.

Hans Kindler Goes to Chicago For 4 Concerts

Arrives in New York Today; Will Fill Engagement in California.

Returning from successful appearances as guest conductor in Europe, Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra, arrives in New York today and will entrain at once for Chicago, where he is to conduct four concerts at Ravinia Park, beginning Thursday night. Completing his engagement there on July 18, he goes to California to conduct in Hollywood Bowl from July 27 through August 10.

Reports from Europe have been gratifying to Dr. Kindler's friends in Washington. Adama Zylstra, manager of the Kurhaus at The Hague, Holland, cabled C. C. Cappel, manager of the National Symphony: "The audience gave Kindler an ovation after the concert, and in this the musicians participatel by rising in his honor. In the Dutch press, he received most enthusiastic praise from the critics."

Zylstra is one of the principal concert managers in the Netherlands and secretary of the Society for the Furtherance of the Tonal Art, the second largest musical organization in Holland. S. Bottenheim, another well-known manager, cabled: "Kindler's success sensational in Amsterdam."

Dr. Kindler's summer engagements in the United States, forced him to decline two invitations to conduct abroad. He has tentatively accepted an offer to conduct at the Paris Exposition, but the building in which the concerts were to be given would not have been completed in time for him to appear there before his departure. An invitation to conduct five concerts in Russia also had to be declined because the dates came too late.

Soldiers' Home Band To Give 3 Concerts

John S. M. Zimmerman, leader of the United States Soldiers' Home Band, announces the following programs for the three concerts to be given this week at 7 p. m. in the bandstand:

Tuesday—"First Connecticut Foot Guards" (Tasielo), overture to "The Bohemian Girl" (Balfe), overture to "Kunihilde" (Kistler), "Pastel Minuet" (Paradis), "Hawaiian Folk Songs" (arr. Lake), "Little Old Lady" (Carmichael), "When My Dream Boat Comes Home" (Franklin), "Morgenblaetter" waltz (Strauss), "Amigos Espanolos" (Stannard).

French Painter Gives Show of Water Colors

The artist is well-known as an etcher, painter and teacher and received the honorable mention in 1927 and Peabody prize in 1928 at the annual exhibitions of American Painters and Sculptors, at the Art Institute of Chicago.

He was born in Croisic, France, August 9, 1908, and studied art at the Art Institute in Chicago.

The pictures on exhibition at the Corcoran show Mr. Oberteuffer's versatility in the watercolor medium. The many scenes of New Orleans deal faithfully with the Old World picturesqueness of this Southern city. A touch of humor is evident in a number of his pictures, especially in "Lady Leaving Tea Room, Connecticut."

One of the most admired paintings is "Sunset," which has all the effects of a brilliant sunset after a mist-like rain, but without the use of any of the more striking colors on the watercolor palette.

Mr. Oberteuffer has a fondness for street scenes, although some of the outstanding pictures in this show are of landscapes. There are few figures in the compositions, but when there are, they are well-drawn and placed and fraught with action. This is especially true of a Berlin street scene, "Newsboys, Berlin."

The exhibition will last through Sunday, July 25.

Brahms Quartet No. 2 Offered, With Rudolf Serkin at Piano

Three Members of Adolf Busch Ensemble Fill Roles of Violinist, Violist and Cellist in Victor Recording.

By Jay Walz.

What is offered between the covers of Victor's album M-346 is called a quartet—specifically, the Brahms Quartet No. 2 in A major for piano and strings. It is literally that with Rudolf Serkin at the piano and three members of the Adolf Busch Quartet filling the roles of violinist, violist and cellist. That adds up to an instrumental foursome.

But unwinding the disks we hear something different from the usual quartet product, and while Brahms wrote the piece about 75 years ago it still holds surprises, even for close Brahms' followers. More than a quartet, this work is a little concerto, and not so tiny a one at that. Time after time the pianist is required to take the work by the nape of the neck and control the situation. Sometimes he has to be right rough about it, but just as frequently he is asked to lead the fight with well-padded gloves.

I do not wish to detract from the fine work of Adolf Busch, Karl Doktor and Hermann Busch, the string men in this performance, yet it is Serkin's show. He rises to the occasion through one movement after another, doing an aggressive job throughout.

If you haven't heard this piano quartet, you get an idea about it by thinking of the No. 2 Piano Concerto (B Flat) and toning it down a bit as to volume, sweep and length. The piano brilliance, and the Brahmsian mood (which isn't moody at all) is much the same.

Brahms wrote this quartet shortly after his first composition for the same ensemble. Later he wrote another. These three works exactly doubled the number of piano quartets that had been written when Brahms appeared on the musical scene. Mozart wrote two and Schumann one.

Another welcome bit of pianistics comes in Columbia's presentation of Walter Gieseking doing the popular Debussy "Children's Corner." This pair of records, one large and one small, is for anyone who enjoys the light jests of Debussy. Gieseking doesn't lose sight of any of these. Neither does the recording.

This is the first set of the "Children's Corner" that's come through in a long while.

Debussy, we learned last week, gave the six pieces in this suite English titles, French subtitles. He made a mistake with the second number, naming it "Jimbo's Lullaby" for "Jumbo's Lullaby." And so it appears on the disk.

If you want to look into something new—that is, of modern times, turn to Victor's recording of the William Walton "Facade Suite." John Barbirolli brought this work forward while conducting the New York Philharmonic last winter, and it furnished concert goers with some most interesting music—so they said. The records, for which Walton does the conducting himself, show they had grounds for talking as enthusiastically as they did. The suite is developed from dance tunes in setting ranging from roof garden to rural fair.

Gardens Pay Dividend To Home Vacationers

Al Fresco Dining Grows in Popularity, Especially Since Introduction of Portable Kitchens; Many Build Fireplaces.

By Katherine Pozer.

July and August are the months in which the garden pays large dividends to the owners who must remain at home throughout the summer. For the casual gardener the heaviest work is over; weeds are taking a holiday and the grass does not have to be cut so frequently. The outdoor living room and dining room, too, become a reality, as the family meets there for meals and restful hours. In the East, outdoor fireplaces are becoming more generally used. For many years, they have been a feature of California gardens, and Californians have evolved many practical fittings for outdoor dining which add to the ease and comfort of these meals.

There are many gardens in which it is not feasible to have a fireplace and in these the owners are having electric outlets placed in chests or cabinets, where the electric equipment may be stored. At the Atlanta garden school this year a small, complete electric kitchen was shown that could be used in the garden and stowed in the winter months. It was in the form of a painted kitchen cabinet, complete with small sink and shelves for china and linen. The electric equipment included an electric roaster. The owner who had designed it told how she spent her afternoons in the garden reading and sewing and tending her flowers—she grew flowers commercially—and yet on the arrival of the family a hot meal was waiting without the usual running to the kitchen, which often makes garden dining tiresome for the person responsible.

Privacy Is Important.

Privacy is one of the requisites of the "lived-in" garden, and yet it is often hard to achieve in the city and in new sub-divisions. July and August is a good time to check up and "mend one's fences." It is too late to do much about it for this year, although the inexpensive sections of lattice, and lattice fans can be placed to make sections of the garden private until the planting has grown sufficiently. In large spaces temporary tall fences of chicken wire can be placed and the vines of gourds grown to cover them. The growing of gourds is in itself a fascinating hobby and one that is becoming popular. Classes for these are seen in many of the shows. Gourds make charming winter decorations and are being used by gift shops and decorators.

The American Horticultural Society has stressed the culture of gourds, with their study of vines, which it has maintained are too seldom used in American gardens. The member clubs of the local affairs committee of the Horticultural Society in Washington are studying vines and growing them for the society. It is thus possible gourds and other vines will take a more prominent place in the local flower shows. One of the loveliest classes at the fall shows last year was a class for vines and fruit arranged together. A similar feature was a part of the Leesburg show.

Jefferon County.

Mrs. Felix Schneiderhan, president of the Potomac Garden Club of Jefferson County, will entertain members at a box supper at her home in Kearneysville on Wednesday evening. The speaker will be Mr. Schneiderhan, who will talk on "Jefferson County Apples."

Leesburg.

Mrs. Pere Wilmer will speak to the Garden Club of Leesburg on "Colors in the Garden" at the meeting Tuesday at the home of Mrs. J. D. Tyler. There will be a club exhibit of blue and white arrangements in blue and white containers and an award will be given for the best-named rose.

Hot Springs.

A memorial exhibit of flowers will be held for the Baroness Markus Rosencranz at Hot Springs in August. The exhibit will be sponsored by the Warm Springs Garden Club, of which the Baroness Rosencranz was a founder and served as president. Many members of the garden clubs throughout Virginia are expected to attend.

Bethesda.

Mrs. Harry Gormley, of the Rockville Garden Club; Mrs. Whitman Cross, of the Chevy Chase (Md.) Garden Club; Mrs. William Hough, of the Sandy Spring Garden Club; Mrs. Richard Fay Jackson, president of the Chevy Chase (Md.) Garden Club, and Mrs. Bessie Kennedy, retiring president of the Chevy Chase (D. C.) Garden Club, were guests of the Bethesda Community Garden Club for the tour of the gardens of members of the club and for luncheon at the home of Mrs. Louis Gravelle. The Bethesda Club has adjourned for the summer. The next meeting will be September 22.

Winchester.

The Winchester and Clarke Garden Club held a benefit card party Friday at Scaleby, the home of Mrs. Kenneth Gilpin at Milwood in Clarke County. Scaleby has one of the finest gardens in Virginia and is noted for its rock garden. This garden has as its foundation the natural limestone ledges which are found in this section and contains rock plants which have been collected by Mrs. Gilpin over a period of years.

Alexandria.

Mrs. Charles Henry Smith, the newly elected president of the Garden Club of Alexandria, has announced the chairmen of standing committees for the coming year: Mrs. William J. Boothe, membership; Mrs. Gardner Lloyd Boothe, program; Mrs. Andre Mitchell, constitution and by-laws; Mrs. Frank Mason Dillard, civic planting; Mrs. Robert Miller Reece, conservation; Mrs. Gardner L. Boothe 2d, garden gossip correspondent; Miss Margery A. Hall and Mrs. Mauchlin Nivin, maintenance of Gadsby's Tavern Courtyard; Mrs. Frances E. Carter, new plant material and horticulture; Mrs. Charles E. Cabell, tree planting and highway beautification; Mrs. Taylor Burke, restriction of billboards; Mrs. Rathbone Smith, restoration; Mrs. Charles F. Holden, publicity and custody of records and clippings; Mrs. Richard Williams, rose tests; Mrs. Thomas B. Cochran, narcissus tests; Miss Mary Lindsey, finance; Mrs. Willoughby Reade, wild flowers, and Mrs. Malcolm Mathewson, lily tests.

Appalachian Trail Conference.

Returning members of the Appalachian Trail Conference have many interesting things to tell of the meeting in the Smoky Mountains National Park. Maj. William A. Welsh, of New York, was elected president, and Myron Avery, of Washington, vice president. Mr. Avery, as chairman of the committee on shelters, was instructed to ascertain the number of shelters already built and those needed as the National Park Service and the United States Service have signified their intention of co-operating in securing shelters in national parks and forests. The trail from Maine to Georgia is 98 per cent complete.

The Potomac Appalachian Trail Club of Washington had the largest membership present. Dr. J. F. Shairer, supervisor of trails for the club, is an enthusiastic botanist and finds hiking the best way to further this interest. On the trip Dr. Shairer found a rare orchid which he had sought for a number of years.

Garden Queries

Question—I have a clump of fine light blue-bearded iris and would like to add to it a few clear yellows. Could you suggest desirable varieties?—Mrs. L. T. G.

Answer—Alta California is one of the finest yellow iris varieties. It is one of the tallest, if not the tallest variety—nearly 4 feet when well grown. It has been expensive, but is getting into the moderate-price zone now. W. R. Dykes is one of the famous yellow irises much used in breeding yellows, and is still a little more expensive than Alta California. It is early. Lady Paramount and Alice Harding are two fine yellows popular with iris fanciers and still rather expensive. Sunlight and Pluie D'Or, leaders several years ago, are now available at very moderate prices. The lemon lily, Hemerocallis flava and the hybrid variety Apricot make splendid yellow accents for blue-bearded iris.

Question—This year one of my plants of flowering tobacco is distinctly pinkish. Do you think it would be worth while to save seed to see whether any of the plants will be pink next year?—J. C.

Answer—Experiments of that kind are always interesting, and it might be possible to develop a strain that would have commercial possibilities, but I suspect that a possible explanation may be that some of your neighbors have been growing the deep red Nicotiana known as Crimson Bedder, and that insects may have brought some of the pollen to your white plants last season. I have seen a few pink Nicotiana that probably originated in this way and only one was a moderately attractive color, the others weak and washy pinks that never would be missed.

Peony Cultivation.

After peonies have finished blooming, they should be kept growing all through the summer with good cultivation and occasional applications of fertilizer cultivated into the soil a few inches from the crown.

Peonies are ordinarily left in one place for several years, and vigorous plants draw heavily on the soil. Both potash and phosphorus are desirable for peonies, and a general garden fertilizer can be improved by adding wood ashes for potash and bone meal for phosphorus.

Queen Elizabeth Enjoyed Early Herb Garden; Woodruff Leaves and Lavender Still Popular

Several Types Retain Fragrance for Many Years.

This is the fourth in a series of articles on herb gardens.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

A fragrance out of the herb lore of yesterday, with the memory of the great Queen Elizabeth of England woven into its history, is evoked by a handful of dried sweet woodruff leaves. This herb, called "Waldmeister" by the Germans and the "Sweet White Star" by the French, has an ancient lineage which reaches back beyond the days when Good Queen Bess was ruler of the Britons.

In the early morning Queen Elizabeth would wander through the quaint mazes of the palace herb garden seeking the star-like leaves of the little plant she loved so well. It had been familiar to her since childhood and she knew what had been said of its virtues: "hanged up in houses, it doth very well atemper the aire, coole and make fresh the place to the delight and comfort of such as are therein."

Perfume for Rooms.

Elizabeth's damsels learned to know that the way to stand high in the Queen's favor was to pluck unusually lovely woodruff leaves, dry them carefully and then place them in the pierced boxes of sweet scents used for perfuming drawing rooms of the day. The capricious Queen often indicated her royal favor by presenting boxes of sweet woodruff leaves to those who had pleased her in some way.

How those sweet woodruff boxes must have been cherished by the lovely ladies and gallant courtiers who surrounded the Maiden Queen. No matter how her whimsical temper might change toward them, the fragrance of the leaves would remain. For they have the singular virtue of retaining their exquisite ordor for years.

The Elizabethans found another use for sweet woodruff. It was widely used in garlands with which they decorated the somber atmosphere of their Gothic churches. Even to this day, in England, such use is often made of it.

A native of continental Europe, sweet woodruff most probably was brought into England by the Saxons. They taught the Britons, no doubt, some of its homely uses—in wine at May Day—and to bruise the leaves and place them against cuts and wounds.

Cathedral Garden.

In the Cottage Herb Garden of All Hallows Guild in Washington Cathedral Close the sweet woodruff forms an attractive ground cover for shady places. Its flowering now is overpast but its scentless, starry, tiny white blossoms growing in loose umbel fashion were beautiful while they lasted.

Mrs. Helen Morgenthau Fox, sister of the Secretary of the Treasury, in her excellent volume, "Gardening With Herbs," describes the leaves of sweet woodruff in a vivid way. "The leaves are oval—lanceolate, yellow green, slender and in starry whorls of six to eight, growing as they ascend the stem," she writes. "The margins are entire, and have tiny hairs along them, and underneath on the central rib. When the fingers rub against the hairs, the leaves feel rough. When crushed, and especially when dried, the leaves smell of sweet young hay and a little of vanilla."

My sweet woodruff won its own warm welcome in my herb garden. Besides its beauty in spring and summer it gives further largesse in the form of sweet-scented dried leaves for the linen closet and even for finer garments in one's wardrobe. It is a vigorous plant and spreads itself generously over surrounding territory.

A miracle has taken place in my herb garden this summer. The lavender plants are in bloom! Two years ago they were planted and, with the ignorant faith of the amateur, I expected them to blossom forthwith. They did not, yet I cherished them as one does an interest in an unresponsive child in the lively expectation of favors to come.

If remembrance, as a poet once said, "is the fairest flower in the garden of life," it must assume the form of lavender. That dainty floral treasure has the magic power of summoning at will the forms and visions of the past. It seems knit to our yesterdays in links that time cannot break. At the sight of it memories of beloved grandmothers are conjured into being and its fragrance sets astir old thoughts and scenes.

Beston names lavender boldly as one of the ten great herbs. He does not mention it, but another herb historian has that the Biblical name of lavender was spikenard. Therefore it has a place in sacred history because of that alabaster box of ointment of spikenard brought to Christ by a woman desiring to give her most precious possession to the Master. St. Mark paints the picture for us in Chapter 4 of his gospel.

Violet Scent Best in Sachet Powder and Perfume.

The Nazarene was in the home of a leper: "Then came a woman," relates St. Mark, "having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious, and she brake the box and poured it on His head. And there were some that had indignation within themselves and said 'Why was this waste of ointment made? For it might have been sold for more than three hundred talents and given to the poor.'"

Somehow or other, lavender is associated nowadays in the public mind with things English. This is only right, for it has been an inhabitant of British herb gardens for many generations. We read of white lavender in Queen Henrietta Maria's garden at Wimbledon; it grows with grace and generosity of blooming in palace garden and the cottage herb garden as well.

On the streets of London in mediaeval times could be heard the street cry:

"Here's your sweet lavender,
Sixteen sprigs a penny,
Which you will find, my ladies,
Will smell as sweet as any."

This theory is held by Mr. Beston, who has declared: "Something in the soil and climate of southern England, something in the English character have made lavender their own, and with it there will always be a thought of its tall spikes against the whitewashed walls of cottages, and of lavender walks leading from the kitchen garden to the flowers. So cherished indeed is the plant in England, and so many centuries long its garden history, that English lavender as we know it is the type Lavandula Vera no more, but a special and very beautiful garden strain."

In the United States the growing of lavender is a garden adventure full of the changes and chances of mortal living. Yet the rewards when one is successful are worth while. One may walk proudly forth and show to the most discriminating visitor lavender clumps in full blossom without fear of unappreciation. The comely spikes rising somewhat above the plant seem to nod and exclaim "Here we are at last. Make the most of us!"

As sachet ingredient of pot pourri and general heart's delight, nothing can surpass lavender for its devotees. It has some by-products such as conserve of its flowers, lavender water and in England in the old times small dessert fruits or sweets were served on lavender sticks.

Then for those who are heavy laden or burdened with grief this quaint recipe of William Turner in the "Newe Herball," printed in 1551, will bring comfort and cheer: "The flowers of Lavender quilted in a cap and daily worne are good for all diseases of the head that come of a cold cause and they comfort the braine very well."

Gardener's Calendar

The best season for planting Oriental poppies is in August. Prepare planting holes in advance, enriching the soil with manure or compost and a liberal sprinkling of either bonemeal or superphosphate.

• • • •

Plant—In pots, flats, coldframes or nursery rows—seeds of perennials and biennials. Leafmold or peat in the upper inch or two of soil absorbs moisture and prevents crusting. Seedlings will need protection from sun until they have made a good start.

• • • •

Prune climbing roses. Begin renewed feeding of hybrid tea roses as rapidly as they recover from their resting period following the first flush of bloom.

• • • •

Except with plants allowed to set seed, delphinium stalks should be cut back as soon as the bloom fails. Preserve all the leaves below the blooming spike. Many plants will bloom again in fall.

• • • •

Clumps of golden glow will need staking before the flowers open. A barrel hoop, opened, placed around a clump and nailed together again and then fastened to one or two strong stakes, makes a convenient support.

• • • •

Watch gladiolus foliage for signs of thrips injury and spray with solution of 1 rounded tablespoon of Paris green and 2 pounds of brown sugar in 3 gallons of water, repeating spray at least once a week.

Hoe or weed flower beds and apply summer mulches for many plants.

• • • •

Feed shrubbery and shade trees—particularly elms—to promote vigorous growth. After July 15 do not apply quick-acting fertilizers. Wood should have time to ripen for winter.

• • • •

Slips of geranium, coleus, begonia and other house plants that have been growing in the garden should be potted soon, before roots run too far. Pots may be sunk in the border for convenience in watering and feeding.

• • • •

Watch chrysanthemums, nasturtiums and other plants for aphid activity—usual sign is curled leaves. Spray with nicotine sulphate solution.

Garden May Be Improved By Better Cultivation

Rule Is That the Poorer the Soil the Greater Its Need for Being Worked Thoroughly; Care for Garden Is Hard Work in Midsummer Heat.

By Crowell Baines.

Cultivation is probably more an art than a science. Our gardens would probably benefit from better cultivation—and less of it. How much is necessary—or even desirable—is a moot point, just as it is in the corn fields.

For generations the growers of field corn boasted of the number of times they "went through" the corn before they "laid it by." Inquisitive workers at the experiment stations wondered whether this was merely a phase of the gospel of prospering by hard work and lots of it. In field tests they found they could get just as good yields of corn without cultivating, provided they kept the weeds out by pulling.

Not all the rules of the field apply in the garden. A good gardener expects to get from his soil a richer crop than most farmers can afford to work for. A good garden should be more fertile, and the soil should be in better condition than a field—even a rich field.

In the garden, the rule for cultivation seems to run by contraries. The poorer the soil the greater the need for cultivation, even though the poor soil may be clear of weeds. A lean clay that crusts heavily probably needs hoe or trowel work after every rain. A rich border of friable soil will do well with hardly any cultivation except as an aid to weed killing.

Cultivation Is a Job.

In the hot days of midsummer, cultivation is hard work. Weeding in the cool hours that follow summer showers is not so bad. This is one of the reasons that these articles have emphasized repeatedly the working economy of getting the flower garden area into the best possible tilth by deep digging, liberal composting, and addition of sand or coal ashes enough to make the soil friable. A substantial saving is returned in the dog-days when there is less need for cultivation, and weeds pull easily and with less injury to plants.

In a cutting garden it saves work to have the plants in rows. The hoe gets the weeds quickly and easily. In a close-planted border, trowel cultivation is the rule, and this is where good conditioning of the soil saves the most work. With thorough digging in the fall and a general deep cultivation and light spading around the perennials in the spring the work of cultivating ought to be pretty well out of the program by the middle of July.

Many of the annuals such as zinnias, marigolds, nasturtiums, and petunias have now made growth enough to shade the soil and keep the weeds in check. Many of the less vigorous perennials can be mulched with peat or leaf mold which will suppress most of the weeds and make it easy to pull the few that crop up through the mulch.

Summer Mulch Helps.

The main advantage of the summer mulch, of course, is to conserve moisture, but it is also an aid to weed control. For moisture conservation the time for mulching is while the soil is still soaked from the unusually moist June weather. The time to mulch is as soon as the plants are large enough so that they will not be smothered. Don't wait until the soil is dried out and the plants show need of the summer blanket. A good weeding followed by mulching is a good way to avoid the need for water from the hose, and a bale of peat judiciously applied may save its full cost in the water bill.

Dahlias, in particular, seem to benefit from a fairly heavy mulch in hot weather. Strawy manure is the best, better even than the more familiar "well-rotted manure." Dahlias and gladiolus can make good use of plenty of water in their growing season, and if the hose is turned on the mulch, it will wash the plant food into the soil. Lacking the manure mulch, the dahlias will benefit from a covering of 6 inches, at least, of coarse grasses or weeds. After the "glads" are up a foot, a mulch of grass clippings does very well.

Some of the time saved in weeding and cultivating can very well be devoted to picking off or snipping the fading flowers, particularly from such annuals as cosmos, nasturtiums, zinnias and marigolds.

Most of the annuals try to mature seed. That is their natural way of perpetuating themselves. If the gardener foils this by snipping away the fertilized blossoms before the seed can set, the plant keeps on putting out flowers in an effort to "go to seed." Feeding even a few seed pods will exhaust a plant more than will the production of many blossoms. To keep them blooming for a long season remove the blossoms either as cut flowers or as soon as they begin to fade.

Columbines Found Suitable For Small or Large Gardens

Have Unusual Range in Color and Size, Are Hardy, But Not Generally Long-Lived; Now Is a Good Time to Plant Them.

Few flowers are more adaptable or fit better either in the small garden or the large border than the columbines. They have an unusual range in color and in size. They are thoroughly hardy, but are not, as a rule, long lived. The native red and yellow columbine will usually seed itself once it is started. Most of the others require a little more care, but they are easy to grow from seed, and the seed seems fairly long lived. I have had good germination from 2-year-old seed, but fresh seed is even more satisfactory.

Now is a good time to plant if the spring planting did not include a packet. Seedlings from July sowings may need some slight protection for the winter, either in a cold frame or in a protected nursery bed. April seedings should develop plants for transplanting to the garden this fall. Columbines bloom early enough so that fall plantings are likely to be better than spring plantings unless the soil is prepared in fall so that plants can go without waiting for spring spading.

Aquilegia chrysantha is a splendid species and one of the tallest, with flowers of a clear yellow, long spurs and a long season of bloom. It is beautiful with almost any flower that has blue or gold—iris, delphinium, early daylilies and peachbells. One of the loveliest possible combinations is with the blue-flowering phlox.

Hybrids Are Favorites.

The long-spurred hybrids are general favorites and there are many good strains—the Mrs. Scott Elliot strain, the Burbank hybrids and the fine Dobbie Imperial strain from England. I am looking forward to Aquilegia longissima, touted as the longest-spurred of all columbines. From a packet of fancy-priced seed last season I got only two plants that were too small for bloom this spring, but are growing lustily this summer.

My native columbine (Aquelegia canadensis) was from seed of a tiny plant growing scarce 6 inches in height in a rocky crevice near Great Falls. In good garden soil the plants were fully 2 feet tall with 20 or more nodding blossoms.

Two Good Dwarfs.

Two of the good dwarfs of the family are A alpina and A glutinosa, both rather short-spurred. For those who prefer doubles there are doubles, but it seems to me that the single long-spurred columbines approach perfection in form and habit of growth and that the doubles miss that by the doubling.

Most of the columbines will do well in full sun, but most of them are woodland plants in nature and will do quite as well in medium shade. My experience has been that the plants in shady locations do not bloom so profusely as in full sun, but bloom longer and are longer lived. Several other growers agree that the season of bloom is longer in partial shade, but there is no general agreement that plants in the shade live longer.

Three or four seasons of bloom are about all that can be expected from a columbine, though many live much longer. To keep up a good collection it is well to plant a packet of seed every year or every other year. A small flat kept cool on the north side of the house is likely to be most satisfactory for summer seedings.—C. B.

New Iris Beds Need Rich Soil

Ridges Around Plots Hold Tiny Roots in Ground.

In preparing iris beds for division and planting or replanting, it is well to remember that they are fairly heavy feeders and will occupy the bed for three or four years. But the rhizomes should not be in contact with any decaying material.

One of the best methods of preparing an iris bed is to shovel out 3 inches or more of the top soil and then work into the next spade depth a good quantity of rotted manure, compost, or peat. Gypsum or land plaster is better than lime to provide calcium. A liberal dusting with superphosphate tends to make the stalks strong and firm. Bone meal is fine, but rather too expensive for general use.

After the lower soil has been enriched, return the 3 inches of top soil that is relatively free from humus and decaying material. In planting remember that what the bearded iris needs most is good drainage and plenty of sunlight.

The rhizomes should not be buried. They should be practically on the surface with the top third of the rhizome exposed to the sun. In dividing iris save as many of the roots as is convenient. They are useful to anchor the plant while it is putting out new feeding roots. A good way is to build up a slight ridge—say 2 inches high. Set the rhizome on that and spread out the roots and cover them with soil, leaving the tops of the rhizomes exposed. The new roots will strike down and will make good use of the buried plant food.

Another Short Short Mystery Story by the Author of "Death—West of Guam"

DEATH in the PASIG

by RAOUL WHITFIELD

THE CEILING FANS stirred hot air and made faint creaking sounds as they turned slowly. Shrill, native voices reached the cafe from the Escolta, Manila's main street. Jo Gar kept his blue-gray eyes on the tall glass of lemonade he was sipping at intervals. It was about as hot as he had ever remembered! Baguio would be better because of the altitude. Or perhaps an inter-island trip would help.

He raised his eyes to the bulk of Ben Rannis and noted that the manager of the Manila Hotel was pale, very pale.

Rannis stood near the screened doors and searched the cafe with his dark eyes. Then he saw Jo Gar, moved swiftly toward his table.

He weighed more than 200; he was a powerful man. Perspiration streaked his heavy face as he pulled a chair from the table, set it down closer to the one Jo Gar occupied.

"You appear ill—and you hurry too much. What is it?"

Rannis muttered something that sounded like a curse. He was breathing hard; it was almost as though he had been running along the Escolta.

Rannis Is Threatened.

"The Cheyo Maru's in," he said in his husky voice. "Got in two hours ago. Craise was aboard. He sent me a message. It was given to me over the phone by a Filipino who acted damned cheerful about it. He said, 'Meester Craise has arrived. He wishes me to tell you that information has come to him you are in great danger. It is better to leave the city at once.' Then he hung up."

Jo Gar frowned. "It was Craise's brother you killed, two months ago, I think," he said steadily.

Rannis groaned. "You know damned well it was, Jo," he replied. "And you know damned well Howard Craise is out to get me for it. One way or another. And it was an accident."

The island detective shrugged his shoulders slightly. He smiled with his thin lips.

"You have been drinking," he reminded. "John Craise was not strong. You struck him very hard, but I feel certain you did not intend to kill him."

"He'd been drinking, too. He called me a nasty name. That all came out at the trial. Howard Craise knows all that, even if he was in England at the time."

The hotel manager's eyes narrowed; he added hoarsely:

"He'll kill me, Jo. I can't shoot. I want you to go to him, tell him how it was. He's at his brother's place—fix it up, Jo. He'll get brooding—in this damned heat——"

His voice broke. Fear was gripping the big man, and Jo Gar hated to see fear in a man's eyes. He said slowly:

"I will go to him. Where will you go?"

Rannis swore. "Along the river—got to get a drink, keep away from the hotel until you see him. The heat'll get him thinking——"

He turned, went slowly from the soft-drink cafe. His fingers were twitching at his sides. Jo Gar shook his head very slowly.

There was difficultyy in getting the connection; nothing was done hurriedly in the islands. Jo Gar held the receiver, waited. Several minutes passed. Then a voice came to him. It possessed a slightly English accent. It was a heavy-toned voice.

"Are you there? Howard Craise speaking."

The island detective said slowly: "It is Senor Gar. You perhaps remember me in matters of the island police. I would like to come to you, talk with you. It is the matter of your brother's death."

He paused. There was silence at the other end. Then the voice sounded again. It seemed colder in tone.

"At 6, say? Here, at the house?"

"At 6, thank you. I will arrive."

The Island detective left the cafe. It was almost 5, but the heat was still very severe. He turned off the Escolta, moved down a narrow, winding street toward the Pasig. Behind him there was a clatter of a pony's hooves. A native voice shrilled at the animal, urging greater speed. Jo Gar stepped into an evil-smelling doorway, turned. The carromatta passed close to the broken curbing; he saw the driver clearly. Back of the little seat, in the interior of the small, two-wheeled carriage, he saw another figure. Then the carromatta was beyond him, going rapidly toward the river Pasig.

Jo Gar stepped from the doorway, looked for another conveyance. There was none in sight. He sighed heavily. One could not answer a telephone 3 miles from the Escolta—and yet arrive on a narrow street just off the Escolta two minutes later. For that reason Jo Gar was very anxious to keep track of the carromatta which had just passed him, bearing as a passenger Howard Craise.

* * * *

In five minutes he obtained a carramatta, gave the driver instructions. But it was a useless drive. There was no sign of the two-wheeled conveyance in which he had seen Howard Craise. After a half-hour tour of the narrow streets running toward the Pasig from the Escolta, Jo Gar descended and paid the driver.

It was slightly cooler; he would sip another iced drink, hire another carromatta and go out to the Craise house. Filipinos could gossip; he did not wish to give his last driver the opportunity to talk—not with some servant in the vicinity of the Craise home.

He had his drink, hailed a native driving a good-sized pony, and was driven at fair speed to the Craise house on the bay. The Island of Cavite could be plainly seen; Jo stood on the wide porch and frowned at it. When the Chinese servant opened the door, however, he was smiling.

He waited less than five minutes in a large room that was almost cool. Howard Craise came downstairs rather noisily; he was medium in size with blond hair and blue eyes. He was dressed in a suit of white duck, but he did not look so cool.

Jo Gar nodded. "I will arrive directly at the object of my call," he said. "Mister Benjamin Rannis has been murdered."

He watched Craise's body jerk—watched the right hand come upward, then relax. He saw the blue eyes widen, narrow again. And then Howard Crais spoke.

"But it's only been——"

He checked himself. The island detective nodded, smiling pleasantly.

"A very short time since you had your Filipino boy call and threaten him," he finished. "That is true."

Craise was staring at him. His fists clenched; there was sudden anger in his eyes. He spoke in a hard tone.

"Of course no servant of mine called him and threatened him. That's absurd. If it's circumstantial evidence you are counting on——"

He checked himself again. Rage was in his eyes. Jo Gar bowed slightly.

"I admire the way you think, senor," he said quietly. "Circumstantial evidence is quite unsatisfactory—in the islands, of course. I merely wanted to inform you——"

The bell tinkled. Silently the Chinese servant went to the door. He opened it, stepped aside. Juan Arragon, of the city police, his fat face a brown mask, came toward them. He nodded toward Jo Gar, bowed to Howard Craise.

"Will you be so kind as to come with me to the city?" he asked. "We have just taken the body of Mister Benjamin Rannis from the Pasig River. He is dead, knifed. You are implicated. My superiors are anxious that you——"

Craise smiled with his lips. "Frame-up, eh?" he muttered. "Of course, I'll come—Wong, my helmet!"

He moved toward the square reception hall. Juan Arragon let his eyes meet Jo Gar's.

"You do not seem surprised—to learn of Mister Rannis' death," he said slowly.

Jo Gar smiled. "I had just informed Senor Craise accordingly," he said simply.

He watched Arragon's eyes narrow in surprise. The Manila police officer was no fool. He said very quietly:

"I came here very rapidly. In a machine. The body was just discovered. Yet you already knew?"

Joe Gar said slowly: "Why did you come here so quickly?"

The fat-faced officer smiled a little. His voice was very smooth as he replied:

"There was certain evidence."

The island detective nodded. "That was my reason for coming here without knowing that Senor Rannis had been murdered," he said, very slowly. "There was certain evidence."

* * * *

Manuelo's was a shack not far from the river—perhaps 100 feet up a narrow alley. It was frequented by coolies, half-breed Spaniards, low-class Filipinos and others of the river. Manuelo himself was a small, emaciated man. He had bad teeth and a scarred face. His fingers were long and bony.

He repeated a good many times that the Americano Rannis had come in for a drink. It had been sake, he thought. He could not remember. Many rivermen had crowded his place. He said that Rannis had looked very sick. He had not stayed long. Manuelo was not sure of the time. Senor Rannis had needed air. He had gone away. No, Manuelo did not know Senor Craise. He had never come to the place.

And that was about all. The Chinos on the junk had difficulty in talking with Gar. They were not sure where the body had struck the water. They pointed at the spot where Rannis' body had been seen—the one who had gone overboard said that he thought Rannis had moved his arms a little. But not after he had reached the Americano.

After two hours along the Pasig, Jo Gar sighed and muttered to himself:

"It is always so with the river Pasig. So little seen or heard. And it was not dark, even. Supposing, now, another than Howard Craise had been in the carromatta?"

He called Arragon's office from a little tobaccco shop just off the Escolta. Juan's voice held an excited note.

"Come to me at once!" he urged. "Here in my office we have the murderer of Senor Rannis! He has confessed."

Ten minutes later Jo Gar entered the office. His eyes went from the khaki colored uniforms of the two Filipino police to the figure slumped over the desk. Jean Arragon said sharply:

"Donnell—up!"

The main raised his head, turned slightly, stared at the island detective. Jo Gar sucked in his breath, muttered to himself:

"Marie! But they—are alike!"

This man's hair was a dirtier blond color. His eyes were bloodshot, looked larger than Senor Craise's. He was more stooped—and looked older. But there was similarity—great similarity. In the carromatta, seated erect, they could have been easily mistaken.

"He is—one Donnell. A sort of beachcomber," Arragon said slowly, a trace of excitement in his voice. "My man found him cowering just across the Pasig from the scene of the crime. We have the knife—he tossed it away as they closed in. He has confessed. It was a terrible scheme—he knew of his resemblance of Howard Craise. For months he has awaited the senor's return. He has threatened Senor Rannis, again and again. He got into the carromatta after siesta time today, drove toward Manuelo's. He knew that Senor Rannis went there. When Rannis came from the place he followed him to the river, knifed him, dragged him across the junks—threw him overboard. He made his escape. Later, when we were bringing Senor Craise to trial, he planned to go to the senor, tell what he had done—for sufficient money. Many thousands of dollars. He would force Senor Craise to pay—and then he intended to get away with the money. And not to confess. A tremendous scheme!"

"Let me go—into the bay! The sharks——"

He had a broken, husky voice. His body looked thinner than Craise's. Collopsed across Juan Arragon's desk, he was a pitiful figure of a beaten man.

"Do they not look alike?" Arragon asked, grimly. "You see, after the murder his nerve deserted him. He went to pieces. Is it not fortunate we were careful with Senor Chaise? You see, he did speak with you over the telephone."

"I will come soon to your home, Senor Craise," he said into the mouthpiece. "I have news of importance. I will be there within the half hour."

He hung up the receiver, smiled faintly at Jo Gar.

"It was Senor Craise—asking for news," he said. His eyes fell on the slumped figure. He spoke sharply to the Filipinos, telling them to take him to a cell.

They half dragged the man to the door. Jo Gar stood aside, frowning. Arragon was smiling broadly. He rubbed his browned hands together. There was the sound of clattering as the Filipinos dragged the prisoner down the narrow stairs that led to the corridor through which they would walk to the cells.

"It is well we were not too hasty with Senor——"

Arragon's voice died. A strangled scream sounded from below. There was a heavy thud—the sound of a body falling. Jo Gar jumped toward the door. The wooden stairs had a landing half way down—the remaining steps were slanted in the opposite direction, hidden from his sight. There was a low groan—another crash of a body going down.

He struck outward and downward with the butt of the gun. It battered heavily against the attacker's head.

He could hear heavy breathing as he started down the stairs. Arragon at his heels. On the landing they turned, stared down.

One Filipino was on his knees, holding his head with both hands. Red stained the fingers. The other was lying motionless against the corridor wall, face downward. The screened door opening on the alley just off the Escolta was wide open. The prisoner who resembled Howard Craise was gone!

* * * *

Jo Gar sat in the open carriage and fingered the Army colt. His lips were pressed tightly together; he was frowning with narrowed eyes. The police search was being carried out along the big boat waterfront, not along the Pasig. Juan Arragon was thinking of the prisoner's words—"Let me go—into the Bay. The sharks——"

The caleso driver pulled up the horse, twisted his brown face. Jo Gar paid the man, slipped from the carriage, moved swiftly toward the bay. He kept close to an old stone wall on his right.

There were lights in the Craise house on the Bay. But the island detective did not enter through the scrolled iron gate. He went through a narrow passage in the wall, moved through the heavy, tropical growth of the garden.

He circled the big house at the rear, reached the Bay side. Stars gave faint light to the water. In the distance he heard the muffled exhaust of a power boat. He halted, listened. The boat was going away—but it was not so far distant. He smiled grimly, moved more rapidly. And then, crouched low and moving swiftly, he saw the figure that had left the sand behind and was coming toward the growth near the house.

Jo Gar waited, the colt gripped in his right hand fingers. He could see the figure now—the man was ten feet from him. The Island detective spoke quietly, sharply:

"Up—Donnell!"

The figure stiffened. Gar heard the quick intake of breath. And then the man leaped toward him.

Jo Gar stepped to one side. He struck outward and downward with the Colt. It battered heavily against the attacker's head, just over the left ear. The man dropped—rolled over on his back. He was motionless.

The Island detective drew a deep breath. He shifted the weapon, got a small flashlight from his pocket. When he looked down upon the figure, there was a hard smile in his blue-gray eyes.

"Like many tremendous schemes, Senor Craise," he said very slowly, "it has failed."

* * * *

Jo Gar let his eyes move from the figure of Juan Arragon to that of Arnold Carlysle. He was smiling cheerfully in spite of the heat in the police head's office.

Jo Gar Explains.

"Senor Craise was always shrewd, cold," he said slowly. "He was not one to forget that Ben Rannis had struck his brother down. I do not believe too much in the similarity of people. But he did fool me, in Juan's office. Belladonna to enlarge the eye pupils, dirt-matted hair, no erectness like that of himself. And the changed vioce. Neither Juan nor myself knew him too well, you see. And he'd been away for months. This English friend of his who has confessed to imitating Craise's voice—that was a clever touch. Calling up, pretending it was Craise—with Craise passing as a beachcomber, right in Juan's office at the time. And it was this Condon who answered my call to the house, of course."

Juan Arragon nodded his head slowly. "Had Craise got back to his house—we would have been beaten," he said. "He could have received me, immaculately attired. He would have been clean, changed. In a dark room I would not have noticed his eyes. But, of course, after the escape, he realized I would be busy—and that would give him more time."

Jo Gar nodded. "He murdered Rannis, just as he—as Donnell—told us. He got back to the house from the murder in time to receive me. Your Filipino guard was not too good, Juan, thought it is a large place for one man to watch. Craise went out again, after you released him. There was sufficient time. He went to the Pasig, crouched along the bank—and when your men found him he threw the knife away. Said he was Donnell—and looked—a beachcomber. After his escape he got to the big boat piers, where he hid and waited. After dark Condon met him in a power boat. He brought him to the Bay house."

Arnold Carlysle smiled faintly. "But for you, Senor Gar, we would have assumed that a man resembling Craise had tried a pretty plan and had failed. And had then preferred drowning—and the sharks."

Jo Gar said nothing. He wondered if Arnold Carlysle would have preferred it that way. But it was not for him to say.

100-Mile Flights Common at National Soaring Meet at Elmira

Glider Pilots Skillful In Bird-Wing Technique

At Elmira, N. Y., 150 pilots with their 50 gliders have been participating in the Eighth National Soaring contest, which opened June 29. One pilot, Peter Reidel, came to the United States from Germany. Two others are from Lithuania. Flights of 100 miles have not been uncommon.

Floating through the air without a motor, the glider pilot is a high-hat aviator. He is engaged in a new and expensive sport, which paves the way to power flying. His antics seem odd to many.

"Yeah, I know," said an Elmira farmer after a soaring pilot had patiently attempted to explain his flying technique. "You flew a hundred miles down here to my farm, but how'd you do it?"

He did it my emulating the birds. The somewhat incredible performance was accomplished in a contrivance combining the old and the new. Motorless flight underwent experimentation before the dawn of the Christian era; today all the knowledge of modern aerodynamics is employed in the manufacture of gliders.

A glider soars into cloud-banked sky.

Serious Side.

Every year the glider devotees hold a meet at Elmira, and have a great deal of fun turning in some rather amazing performances. The National Aeronautic Association, however, believes there is something more serious in this gliding business. It sees the beginnings of air education in the operation of the motorless planes.

If a person can fly a glider, the association says, he can fly a powered plane. If he flies an orthodox motored plane, he has become a member of the nation's air fraternity, whose present membership is around 15,000, of which about 10,000 are active flyers. The N. A. A. wants to see 20,000 Americans flying private airplanes by 1942.

Glider pilots abroad, where the sport is cheap, are numbered in the tens of thousands. In the United States, where the pastime is relatively expensive, there are a few hundred soaring experts.

As a sport gliding is new in America, but, long before the motors which made speeds of more than 400 miles per hour possible, experimenters were studying the operation of motorless craft carried about by air currents.

Wrights Pioneered.

Expert gliders before they ever attempted to harness an engine to a plane, the Wright brothers followed a long procession of scientists and inventors, who were interested in the technique of soaring. Sir George Cayley, of England, built a glider before the discovery of gold in California, which was used as a basis for research for 50 years.

Later in the century, Lilienthal of Germany was famous as a glider pilot, while in France Le Bris flew a motorless ship which was launched from the top of a wagon. Two score years ago, Chanute, the Wrights, Montgomery and Curtiss, among others, experimented with gliders. However, they were gliding for a purpose—mastery of aerodynamics, gliding as a sport was yet to be born.

The Treaty of Versailles, the cause of so many important movements in the world today, started gliding on its way as an important sport. Since the use of powered aircraft was restricted in Germany, the glider was adopted as a means of training pilots. Proving a laboratory for meteorological and aerodynamic research, the glider has provided a reservoir of manpower for the air force ever since Adolf Hitler began scrapping the treaty.

After Italy seized the idea, so did Russia. France has adopted it also. Gliding is a commonplace in Europe today.

Early Schools.

In the United States glider schools and clubs existed before the formation in 1930 of the National Glider Association, predecessor of the Soaring Society. The glider at that time, however, was an oddity as the Wright Flying Machine had been in 1903.

About 1929 the gliding germ reached the United States. Bob Evans, son of Edward S. Evans, the automobile man, had obtained his gliding button in Germany.

The National Glider Association was formed by William B. Mayo, Ford Motor Co. engineer, together with Edward P. Warner, assistant secretary of the navy for aeronautics under President Coolidge.

After some American glider pilots were sent to Germany for an international meet, Donald F. Walker, secretary of the Glider Association, began searching for a gliding site in the United States. In the course of an intensive study of topographical conditions throughout the East, he wrote to Sherman P. Voorhees, then manager of the Elmira Airport. Voorhees replied that the sandstone hills of Chemung County would be perfect for gliding.

Shortly afterward the idea of a national meet was born.

Men with their gliders came to Elmira. Warren Eaton, of Norwich, World War flyer of distinction, who owned a primary glider, arrived. Dr. Wolfgang Klemperer, airplane expert, went to Elmira and trudged over the hills with Voorhees.

Successful Flight.

A young fellow stopped by Voorhees' downtown office one day. Giving his name as Jack O'Meara, he said he wanted to try out the hills roundabout. Could somebody be had to man a shock cord? Voorhees ran down a hallway, collecting en route a doctor, a dentist, a lawyer and two or three other fellows.

On Harris Hill a couple of the crew held the tail of O'Meara's ship while the others stretch the shock cord, a rubber rope that launches a glider as a sling shoots a stone into the air. O'Meara went up and stayed there. As darkness came on, Voorhees remarked, "Well, I suppose we could shoot him down." The thermals, or upward currents of air, had proved to be wellnigh perfect for gliding and soaring.

In 1930 the first national meet was held at Elmira. It was hoped that young Americans, who could not afford the often prohibitive cost of a powered plane, would be able to "fly" gliders.

The hope of training flyers in inexpensive gliders has so far proved false, since the motorless craft are costly. A good secondary or utility glider costs from $300 to $500, while a primary glider, used extensively for training purposes in Germany, cost a little less. The sailplane and super-sailplane run into four figures.

The National Aeronautical Association looks on gliders as the answer to the problem of maintaining America's supremacy in the air.

Fleet Reserve Association Officers to Give Flag To First Battalion, U.S. Naval Reserves, on July 13

The First Battalion, United States Naval Reserve, will receive a set of silk national colors as a gift from officers of Branch Four, Fleet Reserve Association, at ceremonies to be held in the battalion armory, Tuesday evening, July 13, the battalion announced this week. The flag will be presented to Lieut. James E. Sullivan, commanding officer of the battalion, by Chief Boatswain H. B. Mousseau, U. S. N. Following the presentation, addresses will be made to the battalion by C. E. Lofgren, national secretary of the Fleet Reserve Association, and Alexander Steele, local secretary of Branch Four of the Association.

The Fleet Reserve Association is a national organization with branches throughout the United States. Founded in 1912, its members consist of men of the Navy who have served 16, 20 and 30 years in the fleet before being transferred to the Fleet Reserve. Its membership includes practically all men who have been transferred to the Fleet Reserve. The association is not affiliated with any other organization. In Washington Branch Four meets at the Army and Navy Club located at Eleventh and L streets.

Chief Boatswain Mousseau, now drilling with the First Battalion in a volunteer status, served 22 years with the fleet before transferring to the reserve. He is now retired after 30 years of service. During the war Boatswain Mousseau served with the Mine Division of the North Atlantic Fleet. Lofgren, who was a lieutenant (junior grade) during the war, also has the distinction of having been a member of Admiral Byrd's Antartic Expedition. Mr. Steele, secretary of Branch Four, served as a paymaster in the Supply Corps aboard various ships of the fleet during the war.

Orders issued by the commandant, Navy Yard, Washington, to the First Battalion reveal the following changes in officer personnel of the battalion. Lieut. John B. American Airlines Orders Four New Douglas Planes

As a result of increased business, American Airlines, Inc., has ordered four new 21-passenger transport planes from the Douglas Aircraft Corporation. The new ships will be used for non-stop flights between Chicago and New York, and for intercity business between Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo and New York.

When the planes are delivered American Airlines will possess 44 transport ships—the largest of any commercial airline in the country. Incorporating many comforts and aids to navigation and safety, the new heavier-than-air craft will be powered by engines developing 2,000 horsepower per ship.

Lockheed Develops New-Style Airliner

'Mid-Wing' Plane's Speed Is 250 M. P. H.

A new transcontinental air liner has been developed by Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. The "Sky Zephyr," as the plane is to be known, will have a top speed of 250 miles per hour and a cruising speed of 230 miles per hour. The recently developed plane is "mid-wing" in appearance, contrasting with the more conventional "high" or "low wing" planes now in service. Wind tunnel tests have established the fact that this departure from customary construction will result in generally improved flying characteristics. It also provides excellent space for baggage and mail underneath the passenger cabin to supplement the main compartment in the nose of the ship.

The ten passenger liners will each carry a hostess, and will be placed in service on the northern transcontinental run between Seattle and Chicago, now flown by smaller Lockheed transports.

2 Honorable Discharges.

Private Leon N. Berger, inactive National Guard, assigned to Headquarters Company, 29th Division, D. C. N. G., has been honorably discharged to enable him to accept an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y. Private Harry V. Ellis, jr., Battery C, 20th Coast Artillery, D. C. N. G., has been honorably discharged for the same reason.

Capital, 53 Years Ago, Repulsed Confederates

President Lincoln Himself Led Vermont Brigade to Fort Stevens When Gen. Early's Men Were Sighted.

On July 11, 1864, the City of Washington, for the second time in its history was preparing to defend itself against the advance of an attacking force. Gen. Jubal A. Early of the Confederate Army was advancing on the city from his camp at Rockville, Md. With an attacking force of approximately 10,000 men, Gen. Early was perparing to assault Fort Stevens, which defended the "Seventh street road leading into the city."

The garrison of Washington at the time of Early's raid consisted of 20,400 men, about half the number which a board of high ranking Army officers considered adequate to give the city the necessary protection against attack.

At the beginning of the Civil War, the Nation's Capital was entirely unfortified. However, after the bombardment of Fort Sumter, preparations for constructing hasty defenses had been made.

Ring of Forts Planned.

A commission to prepare defenses for the City of Washington had laid out a plan for providing a ring of forts to encircle the seat of the National Government. With a circumference of 37 miles, the defenses were to consits of 23 field forts south of the Potomac, extending from Fort Lyon, below Alexandria, to Fort DeKalb, opposite Georgetown. At Chain Bridge two forts, Ethan Allen and Marcy, were to be reinforced by three field gun batteries; north of the city, as the plan provided, 18 forts, four batteries for heavy guns, and 14 field gun batteries were erected. The defenses of the Eastern Branch consisted of 11 forts and one armed battery.

When carried to completion, the board of Army officers, composed of Brevet Brig. Gen. J. G. Totten, Chief Engineer, United States Army; Brig. Gen. M. C. Meigs Quartermaster General, United States Army, formerly of the Army Engineers; Brig. Gen. W. F. Barry, Chief of Artillery; Brig. Gen. J. G. Barnard, Chief Engineer, Defenses of Washington, and Brig. Gen. G. U. Callum, Chief of Staff to the General in Chief, felt the hastily fortified Capital should be garrisoned with 40,000 men to give the city and Government "feeling of complete security at all times."

On the hot, dutsy July day when Gen. Early appeared before the city only 9,600 men could be thrown into the fortifications to the north of the city to repel his attacking force. In the area about Fort Stevens about 8,000 men had been massed to resist the invader. President Lincoln had led a brigade of Vermont troops to the Fort at dawn and remained at the fort throughout the engagement.

Lincoln Under Fire.

About 2 o'clock in the afternoon Gen. Early placed his sharpshooters on a hill to the north of the fort, from where they could train a withering fire upon the defenders. On the parapet of Fort Stevens President Lincoln stood under fire, the only American President to be in such danger during his term in office. A surgeon standing next to the President was wounded by a bullet from the rifle of a sharpshooter, the only casualty to be recorded within the confines of the fortification, although about 600 men were killed or wounded in the encounter.

Gen. Early never expected to hold the city even if he succeeded in capturing it. The purpose of his expedition was to demonstrate the weakness of the Federal Government to the foreign powers friendly to the Confederacy. If he could enter the city and hold it for the space of a single day, the South hoped that recognition would be forthcoming from its European friends.

The state of the defenses of Washington at the time of the raid made capture of the city possible. Located on the borders of one of the strongest of the Southern States, and surrounded by the territory of a State which was somewhat favorable to the Southern cause, the National Capital was in a poor geographical position for adequate defense. Furthermore, little study had been given to the proper means of protecting the city against attack before the outbreak of the struggle. American officers knew less about the defensive geographical possibilities of the Capital City than they did about many of the urban centers of Europe.

It was at this vulnerable prize, which had been so hastily prepared for defense, that Gen. Early launched his nearly-successful attack. But the Army engineers had done their hurried work well. The ring of forts had been well-planned, and Fort Stevens was no exception. Although he had come within sight of the Capitol dome, Gen. Early was unable to overwhelm the garrisoned defenses of the city, and was compelled to withdraw.

The forts which proved themselves of such great usefulness were kept in repair during the Civil War, but later fell into decay. No appropriations were made to maintain the defenses either as fortifications or as monuments of the struggle. However, with the revival of the L'Enfant plan for the City of Washington in 1901 a plan was advanced to create a "Fort Drive" connecting all of the Civil War fortifications in a scenic boulevard encircling the Capital.

Upshur to View Marine Groups Armory in D. C.

Director of Reserve Will See Building Criticized by Senator Walsh.

Col. William P. Upshur, U. S. M. C., Director of the Marine Corps Reserve, accompanied by his assistant, Capt. Merlin F. Schneider, will inspect companies A, B, C and D, Headquarters, Band and Medical Detachment of the Fifth Batallion, Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, on Tuesday evening.

The batallion will be ready for the inspection at 8:45 p. m. on the District National Guard drill area south of Pennsylvania avenue near Sixth street.

Following the inspection of troops Col. Upshur will look over the old building at 458 Indiana avenue, loaned to the Marine Corps by the District Commissioners.

This building was recently inspected by Senator David I. Walsh, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, and Representative Mel Maas, of the House Naval Affairs Committee. Senator Walsh was outspoken in his condemnation of the inadequate and discouraging armory conditions under which the Fifth Battalion functions, declaring the entire armory situation in the District "a disgrace to this country's national defense."

Other Inspections.

On Thursday Col. Upshur and Capt. Schneider, accompanied by Maj. Harvey L. Miller, commanding the Fifth Battalion, and staff, will inspect Company E, at Alexandria.

On Tuesday of next week Company F at Rockville will be inspected.

Company G, at Roanoke, Va., was inspected by Col. Upshur several weeks ago.

The inspection of the local batallion by Col. Upshur will conclude the inspection tour of the 19 Fleet Marine Reserve battalions by that officer. On this inspection trip he looked over the Marine Reserve outfits at New York City, N. Y.; Boston, Newark, Philadelphia, Chicago, Seattle, Los Angeles, Galveston, Augusta, San Francisco, Toledo, New Orleans, Spokane and Indianapolis.

For the past week Maj. Miller has been on active duty at headquarters, U. S. Marine Corps, as a member of the joint Naval-Marine Corps Reserve policy board. He will be relieved from active duty on Saturday.

Prepare for Camp.

Officers and men of the Fifth Battalion are making all preliminary preparations for the field training schedule of the Fifth Battalion at Quantico from August 15 to 29, confidently predicting that this year's camp will excel in efficieny any field training schedule by any reserve outfit in the past.

The battalion expects to go to camp with its full strength of 526.

At Quantico the troops will be quartered under canvas in a modernized camp area. The trip to and from Quantico will be by water.

Applicants with previous service and those with previous military training in R. O. T. C. or cadet corps units, between the ages of 17 and 35, are accepted at 458 Indiana avenue on every Tuesday or Wednesday evening. There are a few vacancies for riflemen in each company. Several musicians, cooks and buglers are also needed.

Recruits may also apply for enlistment in outlying companies by contacting First Lieut. Martin D. Delaney, Company E, Alexandria; Capt. Ralph M. King, Company F, Rockville; Gunnery Sergt. William Eger, commanding second platoon of Company B, Indianhead.

Atlantic Hops in Transports to Be Prosaic, Recent New York-Bermuda Test Flights Indicate

Thrills Lacking, Unless Whales Blow on Crossing.

New York (AP).—Flying the Atlantic on those big commercial transports promises to be pretty dull, unless the whales blow.

The whales do blow sometimes, and everybody stretches his neck to see, like the crowd around a hawker on Forty-second street. But outside of that, the citizenry probably will be a bit bored when the big winged boats start shuttling to Europe.

The newly inaugurated New York-Bermuda service supplies an index to what spanning the Atlantic will be like in the comparatively near future.

The boats are big, impersonally sophisticated. Here and there is a hint of a woman's touch on the interiors—such as in the linen curtains at the portholes—but for the most part they are merely great-winged flying machines built for a purpose.

Machine Age Products.

They are not spectacular, either in performance or in the conduct of the personnel. They are efficient products of a mechanical age, and the bridge, up forward, looks vaguely like the cab of a sleek, high-wheeled steam locomotive.

The hull is as wide as a Pullman coach. Five bulkheads divide it into compartments in which eight persons can sit comfortably. Each compartment makes up, at night, into four berths, two upper and two lower. The aisle, amply wide, is carpeted, and on the cabin walls and ceiling are lights for night reading.

Both forward and aft are passenger loading hatches. The traveler strolls around at will, once the ship is under way, and as the load shifts from bow to stern the men on the bridge "trim" the ship with an ingenious device which increases or decreases the lift of the tail assembly.

There are storage compartments fore and aft for baggage, express and mail. Either near the bow or the stern, depending on the type of boat used, are the lavatory and the kitchen. On the Bermuda run the kitchens measure about five and one-half by three feet.

Let a housewife try serving more than 30 persons from a work bench of that size. The kitchens look much like those in city kitchenette apartments. Some have heaters, but for the present at least, hot meals will issue from insulated jugs.

Compact Kitchens.

Aluminum shelves with slots for securing tumblers, silverware and dishes range about the steward as he stands in his cubicle. The handles of cups slip over spring traps above him. Over him, too, are fruit cocktail glasses, their bases caught in aluminum slots. In front of him is an ice box holding 75 pounds and to his side is a five-gallon water tank. His work table measures 3½ by 2½ feet. Below his feet, their covers swinging up at the touch of his shoe, are two compartments with storage space for 200 pounds of nonperishable food.

He serves dinner for 30-odd persons, soup to nuts, in a little more than an hour.

The take-off of the ship is uneventful. You settle into your seat. The ship taxies for the take-off. The motors turn up. Just forward of the ship's midsection the great wings spread, and by peeping out a porthole you can glimpse a three-bladed propeller thrashing the air.

Taking Off.

Salt water thrown up by the hull under the impetus of four motors spews against the porthole windows. Then the ship lifts to its "step," the under portion of the hull which rides on top of, instead of in, the water. For a brief moment foam whips from the snout of the boat. Water drains from the porthole windows. Abruptly the spray ceases flying.

You are up.

Below are trees, homes, inlets which dissolve in a moment in the gray of the sea, flecked with white. The sun transforms the ocean into hammered silver. Clouds drift by.

Comforts Comparable to Those of Pullman Compartment.

Some pile up tower-like, skyscraper fashion.

The purser and steward fuss about, distributing magazines, preparing meals, answering calls of bridge players for collapsible tables. There is little or no sensation of motion. You get acquainted with a fellow passenger across the aisle only if you borrow a cigarette. Perhaps an officer will stroll back from the bridge to volunteer information as to altitude, speed and position.

The navigator unscrews a porthole cover and tosses out an aluminium powder bomb to determine drift. The atmosphere is that of an ocean surface liner, even to the presence of the candid camera fiends who train their sights on anything, including the man across from you who has gone to sleep.

Smooth Landing.

Time drags. You study the hinge fixtures on the landing flaps, yawn and consult your watch interminably. You wander up to the chart room, just aft of the bridge. You peek at the captain and catch a remark to his first officer: "My kid got 95 in arithmetic."

Maybe you sight that whale, a dark blob on the great saucer of the sea, or a surface ship, a toy boat in a mill pond. Presently you eat. The purser doubles in brass, doffing his blue coat in favor of a white one to help the steward.

Someone remarks, "We're in." Necks crane. Within minutes a dark ribbon on the horizon sweeps under you. Houses pop up off the ground. The ship banks gently. Blue water, a cove, swings into line with the nose of the hull. The flaps come down. The hull streaks along the surface. Spray flies and salt water pours against the ports.

Surprisingly fast, the ship eases to coasting speed.

Folding ladders drop from the roof for exit.

The purser puts away his spray gun. He has been filling the cabin with that stuff housewives use to kill flies and mosquitoes.

"Regulations," he volunteers. "Government . . . insects . . . can't bring 'em in from another country."

It was pretty dull if you didn't sight that whale.

A Cannon Stands Guard

In Battlefield Memorial Park, near Fredericksburg, Va., old guns and cannon mark the scene of a famous encounter during the Civil War.

New Plant Occupied By Lockheed Aircraft

Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has moved into its new factory at Burbank, Calif. The factory, erected on the same sit which for ten years has been the center of the company's activities, is located a mile from Union Air Terminal, the West's largest airdrome.

By modernizing both equipment in the several departments production has been speeded up until the company is now delivering more than twice the number of planes it completed a year ago.

Bridge

By Marian H. Barre.

It looks as though the tenth anniversary tournament at Conneaut Lake would be played without benefit of Washington competition. Of course, there is always a chance that the local master point collectors will change their minds before Wednesday, the day of the first Conneaut event. But unless that happens, even the mixed pair championship will go undefended—it was won last year by Dr. A. J. Steinberg, of this city, playing with Mrs. Harold White, a Clevelander, in a first-time partnership.

Mrs. Daisy Hubbard Mott and E. B. Conally are the only Washingtonians who have definite dates for Conneaut. Mrs. Mott will be paired with Vincent Boland, the Cleveland expert, while John Kunkel will partner Conally. This leaves no hopes for an all-Washington championship, but the Hershey tournament may tell a different story. It is unfortunate that these events are held so close together, even the most ardent fan can seldom get away over two successive weekends. It has been one of the deciding factors against Conneaut. The Pennsylvania lake resort is a nine-hour drive from the Capital, but Hershey is just around the corner.

The Chocolate Town championships open on July 23 and finish on the 25th. They include four events—open pairs, teams of four, mixed pairs and women's pairs. Hershey is a beautiful spot and its hotel is one of the best in the country. The Washington players who went there last year enjoyed every minute of their stay. So loud were their praises that they sold Hershey to all their friends. About half of the local population seems to be planning to attend. W. M. McIntyre and Leroy Thurtell will head the delegation of stars and hopes are high that someone will bring home the chocolate bars.

A complete cast has been selected for the first master players game held in this city, the initial session of which will be run on Wednesday, July 21; the second on the following, both at the Shoreham Hotel.

The following is a partial list of partnerships: Mrs. M. R. West and L. R. Watson, jr.; E. B. Conally and S. F. Gerber; Leroy Thurtell and W. M. McIntyre; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Lemon; Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Pennebaker; James Sourilas and E. B. Swanson; Mrs. M. M. McKenzie and Commander W. A. Corley; A. J. Steinberg and H. R. King; M. F. Lake and D. C. Elliott; Martin May and Eugene Benson; Mrs. H. C. White and Arch Kepner; Col. E. B. Gray and Col. Tiesley; Al Roth and Oscar Brotman; Col. Edward Cillord and W. R. Lewis; Moe Jacobs and A. L. Westrich; Mrs. A. P. Stockvis and H. P. Cochran; Capt. V. de Sveshnikoff and H. R. F. Brett; Mrs. E. B. Swanson and Joseph Granger; Mrs. D. H. Mott and (probably) E. Perkins.

There may be some changes in pairing before the games. The list is partial because the committee has listed only the registered players.

It is a disappointment to Wessel Stewart's loyal clientele that the Thursday evening games at the Hotel Carlton will not be resumed until some time in the fall. The second session at the Carlton was interrupted by Mr. Stewart's illness after 12 games had been played out of 18 scheduled. Mr. Stewart has decided to award the season prize for the second session on the basis of the games played. First prize goes to Thomas Hamlin, the second to Mrs. C. W. Boyce. The winners were in the same relative positions after the conclusion of the first session.

Scores in the second half were very close. Mrs. E. L. Bono, C. Murray Hall and Mrs. Lila Tudor turned in third, fourth and fifth scores. There was only a fractional difference between them.

John Kunkel, ace player from Harrisburg, was honor guest at a dinner given in the Washington Whist Club by Manager W. M. McIntyre. Following the dinner, Leroy Thurtell was host at a team-of-four match played in his home. Kunkel was paired with E. B. Conally, Thurtell and L. R. Watson, jr., completing the team. The opposing team was formed by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Lemon, Oscar Brotman and McIntyre. A 32-board match was played to a tied score.

With players of this caliber, the game was serious and hard fought, but a moment of "comic relief" was furnished by Conally. Now, "Doc" is not "addicted to wild bafflement," like a character in recent fiction—quite the contrary; he has baffled many a player. The story goes:

On a board played against McIntyre and Brotman all four suits had been bid, or psyched, by this pair and McIntyre finally got the contract with a bid of 3 no-trump. Conally and Kunkel went into deep concentration, mentally reviewing the bidding to make plans for defense. Conally was the first to emerge. He was about to play out of turn when McIntyre said, "It's not your lead, Doc."

"Ah!" murmured Conally, "Whose lead is it?"

Bridge players look to New York as Mohammedans look to Mecca; hence it is something of a shock to learn that cut-throat bridge has just been introduced at the Cavendish Club there after it has been played at the Vanderbilt in Washington for over six months. John Rau is the leading exponent of cut-throat in the big berg, while Roy Thurtell has that honor here. The hand below was played by Rau in a cut-throat deal:

North
S J 8 4 2
H K 8 6 2
D K 9 7 2
C 3

West.
S 9 5 2
H J 10 9 7 4 3
D A 5
C K 5

East.
S K 10 7 6
H 5
D Q 10 3
C A Q J 10 7

South.
S A Q
H A Q
D J 8 6 4
C 9 8 6 4 2

Rau, in the south position, opened the bidding with one diamond. His bid conformed to the rules of cut-throat; to open, a player must hold at least three honor tricks and bid not less than a four-card suit. Every player bids on his own in this game; the dummy is selected by the player who wins the contract. The selected player may refuse to be his partner, but the hand is spread as dummy just the same. If he accepts he shares in declarer's fortunes; if he declines, declarer wins or loses to him as well as to the other two players.

West with six-card major and an honor trick and a half, bid two hearts, north passed, and east bid three clubs. Rau now bid three spades, which was safe because cut-throat is never played at less than a game contract. North bid four spades, hoping to match his hand with Rau's, and east, with the same hope, bid five spades. Everybody passed and east chose Rau for the dummy. Rau promptly declined and doubled the contract. It was defeated five tricks.

THE FEDERAL DIARY

By Scott Hart.

The Navy Department, perhaps more than any branch of the vast Government service, abounds in interesting personalities. Barry Sullivan, Navy Department reporter for The Post, has interviewed one for this column.

One of the most forward-looking men in the service of the Navy—an "American Samuel Pepys" — has been on duty at the department for 48 years. He is William M. Smith who entered the Navy Department as a civil service employe in 1892. Admiral Dewey was then a captain, serving as chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting. There were only 718 active line officers. Although there were 111 ships in the Navy, none could be called first class; 11 were considered second class, and 30 were third class. Twenty-seven new ships were under construction. There were ten navy yards on the East Coast, and only one, Mare Island, on the Pacific Coast. There was no chief of Naval Operations, no general board, no submarines, no airplanes, no radio. There was no selection law, and promotions came by seniority, after professional and medical examination.

When Smith entered the Navy Department at the age of 22, he had already been "on his own" for seven years. As a railroad telegraph operator, he had traveled from the Ohio River country to Montana. He had learned to adapt himself to conditions as he found them.

In Records Office.

After reporting to the chief of the Bureau of Navigation June, 1892, Smith served in what was known as the office of officers' records, which was at one time headed by Admiral Coontz while an ensign.

In this office the personal records of officers were kept. There officers' commissions were issued and the Navy Register compiled. The registrar of the office wrote the commissions of the service men, and they were works of art, so fine was the penmanship. After the death of William Plume Moran, the commissions were drawn up by Smith.

Following his arrival in Washington, Smith took a business course at the old Spencerian Business College. While he was studying law at Columbian University Law School (now George Washington University), the Spanish-American War broke out, and Smith voluntarily discontinued his studies to do overtime work made necessary by the demolition of the battleship Maine in the harbor of Havana.

Admitted to Bar.

After the war he resumed his law course and was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in 1902. During the Spanish War, his duties included matters pertaining to the appointment of volunteer officers, and all applications were presented directly to the Secretary of the Navy, John D. Long.

As a result of this wartime practice, Smith became well acquainted with the Secretary, and when the position was vacant, was appointed to the chief clerkship in the Bureau of Yards and Docks in December, 1898.

Shortly after Smith was appointed he decided to make some changes in the old book system of recording and indexing of correspondence which was then still in use. After a study of the bureau's work which lasted a few months, a card system of filing was installed both for correspondence and accounting, much to the disgust of several old clerks who resented the change in methods. However, in a short time, they were reconciled to the new methods, which made their work much easier by making it unnecessary for them to lift heavy record books.

Navy Rejuvenated.

In the first decade of the twentieth century, the American Navy was undergoing a rejuvenation under the impetus furnished by President Theodore Roosevelt. In 1898, Rear Admiral Endicott had been appointed to the Bureau of Construction, and his work began the revival of the Bureau of Yards and Docks. Shore establishments were greatly improved during his administration of the office by the construction of dry docks and industrial buildings.

Much progress was made in providing better shore facilities for the growing fleet, which were the result of his energy and zeal for the interests of the service. His efforts caused the materials for four new dry-docks, which had been authorized in 1898, to be changed from timber to masonry.

A bitter fight raged around one dock, as the contract for the construction of a timber dock had already been let, and the contractors refused to construct in masonry because of the increased cost. The contract was finally canceled because the contractors would not proceed with the work at a price which Admiral Endicott considered fair. Efforts were made to remove him from office, and the case was taken to the United States Court of Claims, where the position taken by Admiral Endicott was upheld.

Peary in Bureau.

For two years during Admiral Endicott's service Rear Admiral (later Commander) Peary served in the bureau. During his tour of duty there he was much engaged in the preparation of plans for his next trip to the Arctic and the North Pole. He talked and apparently thought of little else. During his service under Admiral Endicott Admiral Peary's son was born, and the morning afterward he arrived at the office with evident pride and enthusiasm: "Well," he exclaimed, "If I don't reach the Pole I now have a boy who will."

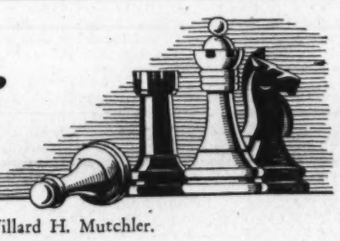
Before the World War Smith frequently served as acting chief of the bureau. His services in this position varied in length from a few days to six weeks. In August, 1916, Congress authorized the appointment of an assistant to the chief of bureau. Since that time he has not been called upon to assume that additional responsibility.

Reorganized in 1917.

In 1917 the bureau underwent a reorganization in anticipation of the additional duties it would be required to assume with the outbreak of the war. At this time Smith was appointed a special assistant and placed in charge of a maintenance and operating division of the bureau. This division was charged generally with finances, annual estimates, real estate, transportation equipment and facilities, and requisitioning of supplies.

Since the World War Smith's life in the service of the Navy has gone forward on an even keel. Many officers and civilians have come and gone, and have been uniformly successful in the administration of their offices under Smith's able tutelage. Such is the career of a man approaching 50 years in the Navy Department.

Chess



By Willard H. Mutchler.

In April of last year I. S. Turover donated a handsome silver trophy for the purpose of stimulating interest in chess in the local high schools, and assuring its continuance. It was the donor's intention to award the cup to the high school team winning three consecutive annual tournaments or scoring three victories, not consecutive, in five years. Now, in a little more than a year after the cup was placed in competition, a difference of opinion has arisen regarding its disposition.

Central High, possessing an exceptionally strong team, obtained the first leg on the trophy in the spring tourney of 1936. At the opening of the school season the ambitious youngsters staged another tourney, and by the winter of 1936 Central had two legs on the prize. Came spring of 1937, and yet another tourney, with Central again victorious by a lop-sided score. And now, Team Captain William Reynolds, of Central, ably abetted by a portion of the local press, serves notice that the trophy has become Central's permanent possession. The misunderstanding has apparently come about owing to a statement in an evening paper, made at the time the trophy was offered, to the effect that annual or semiannual tournaments were in order. The semiannual wording was not challenged at the time of its publication.

The donor naturally feels that the award has lost all its purpose of serving as a three-year stimulus, if it remained in competition for only a year. However, Turover, with true sportsmanship, is willing to abide by the aforementioned statement, provided it receives the unequivocal approval of the captains of all the competing teams. To this end he requests that a meeting of said captains be called in the immediate future to vote on the question.

Captains or representatives of teams from Western, McKinley, Eastern, Roosevelt, etc., are asked to communicate with the donor in the immediate future if this plan is agreeable.

Paul Morphy Tournaments.

The championship title at the Paul Morphy Chess Club hinges upon the outcome of the final game of the tournament, when Max Kessler meets V. L. Eaton. In the semi-final round Kessler drew, for the second time, against Simon Naidel. The standings:

Player.	W.	L.
Kessler	4	1
Naidel	3½	2½
Eaton	3	2
Neufeld	½	5½

In the Class B tourney David Bard maintained his leadership with victories over J. D. Sutphen and W. Horn. R. S. MacCready, the runner-up, kept pace by scoring over Horn, H. Powell and D. Rothgeb. G. K. Camden bettered his standing by trouncing S. B. Bennett and J. B. Eskin. E. W. Kunkle and F. Lind halved, while J. Benjamin defeated Rothgeb nad Horn conquered Q. U. Thompson. At the halfway mark the standings read:

Player.	W.	L.	Player.	W.	L.
MacCready	14	3	Eskin	5½	6½
Bard	9	1	Lind	7½	6½
Kunkle	6	3	Benjamin	5½	8½
Sutphen	6	4	S. B. Bennett	2	4
Dunn	6	5	Thompson	4	9
Camden	7	7	E. J. Bennett	1	3
Saporito	6	6	Rothgeb	1	2
Horn	3	3	Rhodes	½	7½
Morrisette	3	3	Mayer	0	1
Gallant	2½	2½	Powell	0	1
Grodsky	½	½

Migratory Bird Stamp

The new 1937 migratory bird-hunting stamp has been placed on sale at postoffices throughout the country. Every person more than 16 years of age who hunts migratory waterfowl is required to carry one of these stamps countersigned with his or her name.

The stamps sell for $1 each. There is but one single design for this stamp, the plate number being 136,267.

The stamp was designed by J. D. Knap, of New York City, the well-known sportsman and artist. The stamp portrays a scene typical of waterfowl feeding grounds along the Atlantic Coast, showing Great South Bay, New York. On the stamp are shown three male and two female scaups, known as "broadbills" and "bluebills."

The first stamp issued in 1934 was designed by J. N. "Ding" Darling, formerly chief of the Biological Survey; the second stamp issued in 1935 was designed by Frank W. Benson, and the third for 1936 was designed by Richard E. Bishop.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

The sale of stamps by the Philatelic Agency for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1937, amounted to $1,945,019. This record is the highest since 1921, when the agency was established, with the exception of the fiscal year 1935, when receipts amounted to more than $2,000,000.

W. M. STUART

The Philatelic Agency owes its steady growth to the increased interest in stamp collecting. It sells select stock only, all sheets being thoroughly inspected in order to meet the demands of the collector. The agency stamps are for the use of collectors only; none are sold for general use.

In spite of harsh and unjust criticism of a few dealers and collectors regarding condition, it is an indisputable fact that stamps sold at the agency are in the best of condition and worthy of any collection. United States postage stamps rank among the finest produced. The sales at the Philatelic Agency are steadily increasing and the stock is suitable for every need. Frequent new issues of stamps are always eagerly bought. The personnel of the agency deserves much credit for its efficient handling of business over the counter and by mail.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing should be proud of its annual production of millions upon millions of stamps. Collectors appreciate the fact that officials of the Postoffice Department as well as the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are interested in philately.

Unsound Bidding.

Many otherwise good players make a practice of bidding almost any four-card suit. In rare cases an opening bid is sound on a shabby four-card (or even three-card) suit. But most of the later bids—especially in major suits—should express an honest desire to play at that contract if the bidding should suddenly die. There can be no point in bidding a weak four-card suit since it requires such exceptional support that partner can (and should) bid the suit himself.

North: ♠ J 6 3 ♡ A K 3 ◇ A K J 9 6 ♣ J 4
West: ♠ 5 4 ♡ Q J 8 6 ◇ 8 7 3 2 ♣ 7 6 2
East: ♠ K Q 9 8 7 ♡ 5 2 ◇ 5 ♣ A Q 9 8 5
South: ♠ A 10 2 ♡ 10 9 7 4 ◇ Q 10 4 ♣ K 10 3

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

South's excursion into hearts at the range of two in the deal above is typical of the bidding practice described. North, not too optimistically, raised to four hearts. He belonged to the school of sound bridge players who expect a fairly strong long suit as the basis of a free bid at the level of two.

Naturally four hearts were not made. West opened a spade and East's Queen forced out South's Ace. Declarer's best chance was a trump split so he played three rounds of hearts. When they failed to break, South lost two hearts, a spade and a club.

North, a polite player, had intended to make no comment on the bidding but was aroused by South's reproach "for raising on only three trumps." Only then did North point out the topsy-turvy logic which must underlie the show of non-existent strength in the expectation that partner will not raise unless he has as sound a suit as the bidder should have had in the first place.

North also pointed out that the sound and logical bid of one no-trump over East's spade overcall would have showed the nature of South's hand. If North had a good heart suit he would be only too glad to show it at that point and then South could assume his proper role of supporter rather than initiator of a heart contract. As it was, North would have raised one no-trump to three—a contract which would have been fulfilled with overtricks.

North: ♠ 4 ♡ — ◇ K J 7 4 3 ♣ A
West: ♠ 7 ♡ 7 ◇ 9 5 2 ♣ K 7
East: ♠ 9 ♡ 6 ◇ Q 10 6 ♣ 10 3
South: ♠ 10 ♡ 8 3 ◇ A 8 ♣ J 8

Spades are trump. South leads and his side must take seven tricks.

Camera Angles

By Arthur Ellis.

Thousands of Boy Scouts brought thousands of cameras, of every conceivable description, into action during their stay and upon their departure had photographed every landmark, building and every portion of the jamboree program. From the Scout with the box camera to the Scout with the costly miniatures and movie outfits they fell to their task with a vengence and never before have we seen a greater collection of camera enthusiasts with a greater variety of equipment.

Two news photographers standing in front of the photographic tent on the jamboree grounds hearing the fire engines leave the fire headquarters with bells ringing and sirens blowing dashed for the headquarters to determine the location of the fire. A few minutes later they were seen headed for the photographers tent which was now a mass of flames.

We are indebted to Howard Watkins, of 113 West Walnut street, Alexandria, Va., for the following letter:

"I would like to suggest a few kinks of my own which I believe may be useful to other amateurs.

"The first concerns the matter of reflectors for indoor photographs. I have found that aluminum foil insulation, which consists of a coating of heavy aluminum foil glued to heavy paper, makes an excellent reflecting material. The insulation can be obtained at most building-supply houses in rolls of any length and 2 feet or more in width at a cost of only 2 or 3 cents a square foot.

"The foil can be cut easily with scissors into circular reflectors for photoflood lamps or it can be tacked to beaver board for large reflectors. If the foil reflects a brilliant glaring light, it may be treated by sponging a 25 per cent solution of sodium hydroxide (lye) on the surface until it is etched to a smooth matte surface which will reflect a much more diffued light. The reflectors are inexpensive, light in weight and not easily tarnished.

"The second kink consists of a method of preventing a cable release from getting a sharp bend which may destroy its usefulness. Obtain a piece of stiff rubber tubing approximately the diameter of the lower part of the finger grip of the release and slightly longer than the cable. Place the release inside of the tube with slight pressure. It may be then placed in the camera case without danger of it becoming twisted or bent out of shape."

Thank you Mr. Watkins for your very interesting letter. If any reader has any ideas, suggestions or helpful hints which he feels would help other cameramen, write to this column and we will be glad to pass them along.

• • • •

This so-called synchro-sunlight technique that we passed over in a line or two several columns ago seems to be of more than passing interest to Washington's amateur photographers.

Using artificial light to offset deep shadows in foregrounds and on the faces of subjects has recently been brought to the attention of amateurs.

Hollywood's outdoor stills that have that crisp, contrasty look and with plenty of detail in the shadows although evidently made in glaring sunlight, can be traced to the truck load of floodlights and reflectors hauled around to aid the photographer. You can improve your outdoor pictures tremendously by using a flash-bulb synchronized to your shutter as auxiliary lighting to supplement sunlight.

Clouds can be easily retained by using the K2 or K3 yellow filters. Working at f:8 with a 1-50 second exposure and using a fast pan film you will be able to obtain excellent results.

Amateurs are taught that a technically good picture is obtained by exposing for the shadows and letting the highlights take care of themselves. This on the assumption that you need detail in the shadows. Critics frown on photographs with pure black areas. If I like such a picture, I make it.

Dread Snakes Pay Visit to African Boy

Bill Macpherson doesn't mind living near snakes but he draws the line at entertaining deadly mambas in his parlor.

The 17-year-old is used to seeing reptiles in the rocky country about his home in Malvern, Natal, South Africa. Frequently they come into town. When two visited Bill, though, things began to happen.

Bill Macpherson.

"One sultry night I was reading a newspaper," he writes from First avenue, Malvern. "My parents were out. My dog was lying on a mat nearby, and the cat was cleaning itself on the table.

"Suddenly the cat arched its back, began spitting and snarling. I glanced behind me. In the passage was a green mamba, a deadly African snake!

"I seized my stick and struck at it. I missed, but the snake turned and glided out into the night. Rather shaken, I picked up my paper. To my horror, I saw another mamba, probably the mate of the other.

Better Part of Valor.

"Upon seeing me, it retreated into the bathroom. My dog had spotted it and I had a hard time keeping him from tackling it. Now these snakes are remarkably fast and it would have been futile to attack it in a narrow bathroom.

"So I decided discretion was the better part of valor, closed the door and awaited my dad's return. When he arrived, the snake was killed. It measured 6 feet 6 inches!"

Newsfacts—"Most dreaded snake in Africa" is how naturalists describe mambas. Even a slight wound from the fangs generally means death. * * The black mamba surpasses the green in size, often growing to 12 feet. * * Mambas are so irritable and nervous, they can be kept in captivity only in separate cages. Yet they can be tamed. * * They drop from limbs or glide swiftly from bushes to attack humans. Their speed permits no escape.

Self-Inspection

Eugene Jones has his own appendix—not in its proper place in his right side, but preserved in a glass jar and properly labeled, in his laboratory!

You see, the 17-year-old wants to be a surgeon and his hobby is histology. "Histology," he explains, "is the mounting of organisms and organs, either for microscopic study or in jars for structural study."

"Specimens for microscopic study are easy to obtain; however specimens for structural study (human organs) are obtained through what might be termed 'pull.' For obvious professional reasons I shall only be able to say I obtain my specimens from doctor friends and hospitals."

The Jones laboratory is at 1650 Elbur avenue, Lakewood, Ohio.

Is Mistress of Art of Magic

Roberta Byron—One and Only in Chinese Outfit.

"Introducing—the one and only Roberta!"

Little did Roberta Byron know how often she was to hear those words when she started her career as a magician, at 11. Since, she has been introduced at special invitation performances in America, England, Scotland and France.

Roberta, now 20, puts on four acts. The first she calls the "Scotchman's Dream." She produces coins from here, there and everywhere.

In her "Billiard Ball Act," she puts five billiard balls through a series of color changes. "The Miracle" is her name for making seeds quickly grow into a real rose bush.

Last is the Chinese linking rings act. Roberta, aided by her 16-year-old sister, Marion, makes heavy steel rings link and unlink, form various designs.

First Trick Captures Her Imagination.

"My career started," Roberta relates, "when my parents bought me my first trick. It captured my imagination so I wanted to know more and more about magic."

So she practiced in a specially built theater at her home, 325 Harrison avenue, Elkins Park, Philadelphia, Pa. "It doesn't take long to master a trick," she continues. "The important things are the presentation, the way a trick is used, the misdirection involved and holding the audience tense until the last moment when the apparent miracle takes place."

(Story by Parade Reporter Irene S. Greenberg, Columbus, N. J.)

Newsfacts—Magicians admit boys and girls are the hardest to fool. They simply cannot divert youngsters' attention from a trick. * * They save their best tricks for other magicians. So complicated are these that only fellow artists can really appreciate them, they explain. * * Magic originated in the temples of ancient religions.

Stenographer Passes State Bar When 19

She's a full-fledged lawyer at 19!

To Margarette Kennedy, that means infinitely more than just passing the State bar examination. She's had to overcome obstacle after obstacle to achieve her ambition. Even when she decided on her career early in life, there was opposition.

"While I was a very small girl, I was a witness in a lawsuit," Margarette advises Parade from Ensley, Ala. "I was so impressed with the proceedings I resolved to become a lawyer. This resolve grew, even though people told me my ambition was impossible.

Margarette Kennedy.

"I began to read law books while in high school. After being graduated in June, 1934, I entered the Birmingham School of Law.

"Then my father died. I got work as a stenographer and attended classes at night.

"A few months later, Alabama passed a new law. It required an applicant for the bar examination to have had two years' pre-legal training in college and four years' study in a law school.

"But that was changed to allow persons studying before this law was passed to take the bar exam any time before August, 1937. I filed my application—and discovered I couldn't take the exam until I was 21!

"By the time I reached 21, it would be too late. So I searched the Alabama statutes. I found that, by going into a court, I could get legal permission to do everything a person 21 years old could do. Therefore, I had the disabilities removed shortly after my eighteenth birthday.

Only a Step.

"The committee which passes on applications was skeptical, but permitted me to take the bar exam. It lasted four hours. And I passed! I can't tell you how very excited and happy I was.

"Yet I realize that being admitted to the bar is only a small step toward the things I hope to accomplish some day.

"My plans are to combine social service work with my legal education and specialize in domestic relations. Also in that part of criminal law which is closely related to domestic relations, such as crime prevention."

Newsfacts—Like women doctors, female lawyers have a hard time achieving success. None were admitted to practice before the Supreme Court until 1879. But a few have enviable records. * * In 1921, Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, 32, became the first woman United States Assistant Attorney General. She argued tax law, prohibition and Bureau of Federal Prison cases before the Supreme Court. And held the job eight years! * * The first and only woman appointed Federal judge is Florence Allen, of Cincinnati. Now 53, she has been on the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals bench for three years.

Ouch!

A Great Life—If You Can Take It!

We're glad to have with us today Raymond Lincoln—and we should be.

For in his 17 years, he's had some close calls. He's fallen into a sewer; got socked on the head with a huge rock; been bitten by a spider, and fallen off a bicycle.

We'll take 'em in order. Raymond was trying to get a lost ball out of a sewer. He lost his balance, and splash, in he went, too. The boys formed a human chain to get him out.

Raymond Lincoln.

A couple of months later he was playing hide and seek and ducked into a culvert. Peeping from one end, he was smacked on the head by a huge rock. It had become dislodged, rolled down a hill and come to rest against his cranium.

Later, Raymond's leg began to hurt. Again he saw the doctor. A poisonous spider laid him up in bed a couple of weeks more.

Finally, he tried to break his neck. Cycling with a friend, they fell. Raymond came up with face and arm cuts and the friend on top of him.

"Oh, well, what's a little excitement in one's life?" comments Raymond at 47 Main street, Allentown, N. J.

Piano Prodigy Wants a Pony

He Has Cowboy (as well as Detective) Ambitions.

Prible Earle Donoho is worried about his future.

At 7, he has already won fame as a talented pianist. He has played on more than 40 radio programs in New York and in his home city, Washington, D. C. He has appeared with Rudy Vallee and other radio stars.

Still he worries. "I want to be a detective—or a cowboy," he confides. "I play detective with a boy who lives with me most of the time. I practice an hour every day, but I don't like to. I'd like to play baseball, too, but I have to take extra good care of my hands so I won't injure them.

"But most of all I want a pony."

"Prib," who lives at 3609 New Hampshire avenue northwest, began taking piano lessons at 4, now has one big musical ambition. "I want to play the gold piano in the White House," he says.

Newsfacts—The famous "gold" piano in the White House, in service for nearly 35 years, will shortly be retired. It's too old. * * Years ago, a young visitor to Washington, Grace Goodhue, was so entranced by the sight of the gilded piano she sat down to play it. A guard "No! No-ed" her. First thing she did, when she moved into the White House as Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, was to play that piano.

Travels by Plane From Venezuela to U. S.

Covers 5,600 Miles in Four Flying Days

He boarded an airplane in Venezuela as "Miguel Booker." But he was "Mike Booker" when he flew into the Pendleton, Oreg., airport four days later.

The double personality is explained this way: Mike, or Miguel, has spent part of his life with his parents in Venezuela and part with his grandmother in Dayton, Wash. With his parents, he's Miguel; with his grandmother, he is Mike.

Mike Booker.

"This trip by baby clipper plane was my third to the United States," the 12-year-old boy tells. "I covered the 5,600 miles in four days, spending one night in Trinidad and another in Miami, Fla.

"After motoring from my parents' home in Caracas to La Guaria, a seaport, I boarded the plane. We flew through Trinidad, Puerto Rico, Haiti, Port au Prince, Miami, Chicago, Salt Lake City, Boise and Pendleton, Oreg.

"In Trinidad we went for an automobile ride. All the cars drive to the left. It seemed like we were going to hit the other cars coming down the road.

"When I came to the United States in 1934 I knew only Spanish. In two years I learned English and forgot Spanish. So I returned to Venezuela to learn Spanish again. Now I'm back for some more American education."

Newsfacts—Mike traveled over part of the world's greatest aviation system—Pan American's 25,000 miles of airlines webbing the Caribbean, Central and South America. • • Over this sea route, air travel is said to be safer than over land. The sea constantly serves as a landing field in emergencies. • • Here radio telephone, in common use on land planes, has given way to the more dependable short-wave wireless telegraphy. The latter is practically free from tropic static. • • The day when planes sail is known as "plane day" at stops all along the route, and has become a local event even in such large cities as Rio de Janeiro.

Dog 'Paperboy'

Monty at the Mail Box—He Can Always Be Depended Upon.

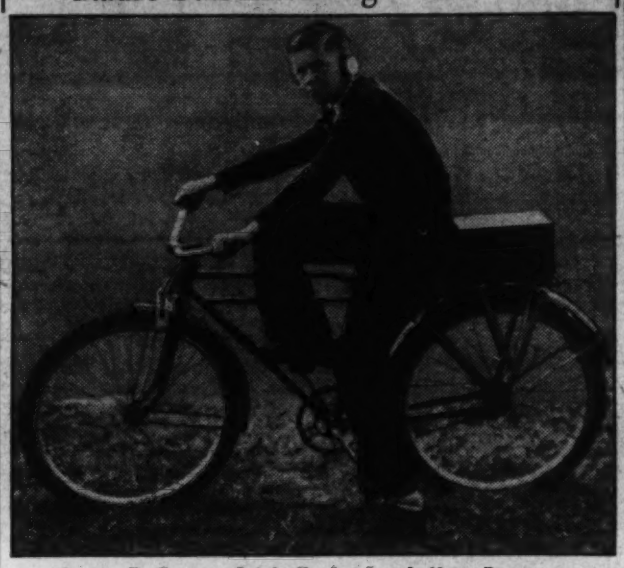
The Cadwell family of Vancouver, Wash., has a private "paperboy"—er, "paperdog."

Every day their German shepherd dog, Monty, trots half a mile, takes the morning paper out of the mail box, and delivers it to his mistress, Mrs. Carrie B. Caldwell.

"All I have to say is, 'Monty, go get the paper,'" Mrs. Caldwell writes from Route 3, Box 48, Vancouver. "I can always depend upon him; he never fools me. And I never fool him, either.

"He's a wonderful companion. He brings us our slippers, shoes and hats, never getting them mixed. He's a wonderful watchdog, too."

Radio Fan Listening In on Run



George D. Brown—Originally for Lunch Hour Programs.

Why stay home to hear radio programs? You can go cycling and not miss a thing—if you build a bicycle radio as did George D. Brown, of 5251 Seventeenth avenue northeast, Seattle, Wash.

"I made it for my school locker so I could listen to lunch hour programs," George, 13, says.

"Afterward I thought of putting it on my bicycle. It worked. I wired the aerial (an old fishing rod) to the back fender and mounted the radio in a cereal box. Three stations come in very clearly."

Newsfacts—On what will the radio ride next? An Ontario, Canada, farmer rigged up one on his horse and buggy. • • And now British Columbia police are toying with the idea of dogsled radios. Sleds drawn by dogs are often used for police work in northern parts of the province. • • It was not so many years ago we were feverishly building sets in match boxes, on rings, pencils, derbies, etc.

Smartest 8th-Grader of 37,000

Smartest of the 37,000 eighth graders in Ohio!

That introduces Mary Kathryn Sharp, 13, who made the highest grade on a general scholarship test given all eighth grade students in Ohio. Her score was 198 out of a possible 200.

"The test covered English, mathematics, history and science," Mary Kathryn writes from 32 West Franklin street, Nelsonville, Ohio. "When I was informed of my score I was so excited.

Recognition Speech.

"I was asked to go to Columbus and make a recognition speech before an audience of 1,000 high ranking school students. The four highest seniors and I sat on the platform with representatives from the State colleges. And the Governor gave us our awards."

Mary Kathryn plans to be a doctor. Her hobbies are chess playing, stamp and match-cover collecting, and sports.

Squeaky Noises Enable Two to Foil Jailbreak

Squeak! Squeak!

The two girls listened. Noises were common enough around a city hall, but squeaky noises, coming from the jail in the basement were not common. The girls investigated and found—a prisoner trying to make his getaway!

"My friend, Darlene Miller, and I were sitting in the living room of my home," writes Phyllis Martin, 13, one of the girls. "My father drives the fire truck, so my family has an apartment here in the Scottsbluff (Nebr.) City Hall.

Got Scared.

"Darlene and I listened to this squeaky noise. I went up to the window and heard it clearly. There is usually quite a bit of noise there, so we forgot it until we went into my bedroom.

"The squeaks were even louder in there. We began to get scared. I called daddy, who was out in front of the fire station, to investigate.

"One of the prisoners was sawing the bars out of the jail skylight. Daddy found the man, because he had metal shavings on his eyebrows and on his clothes.

"That man was sent to the county jail and later to the penitentiary."

Newsfacts—Jailbreaks are often planned ingeniously over weeks and months. A broken spoon may become a "shovel;" a small iron rod wrenched from the bed, a "crowbar." • • Hacksaw blades have been fashioned from watchsprings, or smuggled in by confederates in packages of food. • • A Texas sheriff recently relieved an incoming prisoner of two blades. But later the prisoner escaped, leaving a note reminding the sheriff he had failed to find the other 10 blades hidden in his clothing. • • To prevent the above, modern prisons are equipped with delicate electrical devices that detect the presence of any metal on new prisoners. A tiny hacksaw blade was recently taken from a prisoner's ear. He couldn't fool the "electric frisking machine."

Busy? Sure!

But Has Plenty of Time to Win Turkey Award.

It's too bad there are only 24 hours in a day!

Carl Gribaudo could use some extra hours. While doing senior work in the Lodi, Calif., High School he raised his own prize flock of turkeys and also spent five hours a day caring for a herd of 38 dairy cows.

"I sold 231 turkeys between November and February, keeping 68 hens for my 1937 project," Carl, 19, tells. "The Kimber Poultry Trophy was given me for having the best 4-H Club poultry project in San Joaquin County.

"My sales money is going for a bigger and better turkey flock."

Burglar Bluff

It puts Harold into action—action that wins him a hero's acclaim in his home city, Detroit. With an unloaded revolver he caught a burglar his mother had found in their apartment at 3431 Midland avenue. His father was at work.

"As soon as I heard mother call out I knew she had discovered a burglar," he tells Parade. "She had heard him in our kitchen.

"I ran to the closet in mother's room and grabbed dad's pistol. Meanwhile mother had aroused the neighbors and the burglar had run into the basement. I rushed down after him and shouted, 'Stick 'em up!'

"The burglar was so scared he was trembling. The neighbors came down and held him until police arrived."

Is Trick Rider On Motorcycle

Six-year-old Harvey Penley gazes intently at a motorcycle race. Suddenly he turns to his father. "I'm sure I can do as well as those riders!"

That was no idle boast. In the 15 months since that race Harvey has learned to ride a motorcycle, won a place with a carnival company and thrilled thousands with his daredevil riding. He is the youngest member of the American Motorcycle Association.

"Harvey was so certain he could ride, his father had a cycle made especially for him," writes Mrs. Penley from Little Ferry, N. J. "It will do from 40 to 45 miles per hour."

At that clip he speeds about a 65 degree angle bowl every night for the carnival. He also performs on dirt tracks.

"He rides about four hours every night," his mother continues. "He has never been afraid and plans a career along this line. He has several offers already."

Harvey has never fallen during a performance in the show's wooden bowl, but he has had several spills, none serious, on dirt and cinder tracks. For such emergencies he wears a football helmet with a steel webbing. A steel shoe on his left foot helps him make sharp turns.

Newsfacts—Motorcycle riding is one of the most dangerous sports. Motorcycles simply haven't the weight to hold them to the ground at high speeds. • • Yet racers speed over dirt tracks at nearly 2 miles a minute; stunters, like Harvey, speed crazily in bowls, and now they even play polo on motorcycles • • Four-year-old Leonard M. Vale-Onslow, of Birmingham, England, also rides at exhibitions. Son of a veteran racer, he learned to ride at 22 months of age!

Stumps for Dad.

At least one United States Senator can thank his son for helping him win his office. Joseph Brady Smathers, 13, "stumped" for his dad, William A. Smathers, all over the State of New Jersey during the campaign.

He Never Found Out.

Did we tell you about the guy visiting here the other day who said that when he was a baby he was left an orphan? "What'd you do with it?" asked the office boy, an interested listener as always.

'I Aim to Be'—By Charles Hatfield

A marine engineer.

Why? Because such a career offers so many fields and a chance to do something worthwhile. There is an increasing demand for engineers and few of them fail to make profitable livings. Then, too, it is the kind of work I like.

Charles Hatfield.

The feeling of building things is a fine one. Anyone with any ambition wants to do something for the world. Engineering is vital to the world's progress. There are many things that can be done in that field.

Marine engineering includes ship building and the operating of naval accessories, along with other things.

Editor's Note: This is another in a series of articles by individual Paraders on future careers. Succeeding ones on different careers will follow weekly. These are written not by oldsters who have already "arrived," but by boys and girls who are now in the process of hewing out careers.

For a boy who likes mechanics and has a taste for mathematics and physics it offers a wonderful opportunity.

$1,000 to Start Off.

I decided on this career two years ago, when I was 14. I have taken several steps toward realizing it. First, I have tried to keep myself physically fit. You can do no task satisfactorily unless you are in good condition and I am anxious to do my very best.

In high school I took all the mathematics possible. This subject is essential to my career. Also, I took other needed subjects, such as physics, manual training, mechanical drawing and chemistry.

For several years I have served a newspaper route. I put all my extra money into an endowment insurance policy. This matures in six years and will give me $1,000, enough to get a good start in business.

From my home, 301 Clayton avenue, Georgetown, Ky., I now am contacting my Congressman. I hope to get an appointment to the U. S. Naval Academy. They give courses in marine engineering there, as well as invaluable training along many other lines.

Twirler

Has Juggled Baton in 1,800 Exhibitions.

Buster Harvey—A Pat on the Head From a President.

Buster Harvey, 14, could almost twirl a baton in his sleep. He's given 1,800 exhibitions, beginning when he was but 3 years old!

"Oh, he thinks that's nothing," his father, who taught him those twirls, comments at 48 Elliot street, Hartford, Conn.

"Buster has more than 70 medals, 63 of them first prizes. He also has a china closet full of silver trophies. He won first place in the Ludwig baton contest early this year and has been asked to perform at the annual music festival in Chicago this summer.

"Once he appeared before President Coolidge. The President patted him on the head."

Newsfacts—The largest musical baton in the world was given Andre Kostelanetz, noted conductor, by Hollywood musicians. It is 5 feet long. * * The baton is a symbol of authority and has been so since ancient times when certain officers of the king's court carried them around. * * In music, the word baton has two meanings. It denotes the conductor's wand, of course, and also means a rest between two or more measures.

Ridin' High

Cat Takes to Top of Car For Town Driving.

Dream of riding on fire trucks if you will. But Felix will take the top of an ordinary automobile.

Felix is a white Persian kitten, the pet of Jean Parham, of 1100 Larose Terrace southwest, Atlanta, Ga. And riding on auto roofs is Felix's favorite outdoor sport.

"She likes to sleep on top of our car with her 11-inch bushy tail hanging over the side," says Jean. "That's how she got her first ride. Mother drove downtown, not knowing Felix was there."

Bone Collection Subject of Talks

Melvin Fields has a skeleton—lots of skeletons—in his closet. And he's proud of them.

The 50 animal skulls and skeletons in his home at Munice, Ind., were cleaned and mounted by Melvin himself!

"I'm planning to be a surgeon," Melvin explains. "The knowledge of anatomy and dissection will be of great value to me.

"Finding a cat skull near our home four years ago aroused my interest in osteology (the science of bones). I had to give some coupons I'd saved and a dozen marbles for my first sheep head, but it was worth it. People began giving me skulls they found.

Fairly Easy to Prepare Skeleton.

"Such bones, found in fields, are much inferior to those prepared by hand. They are usually roughened and discolored.

"It's fairly easy to prepare a skeleton. After I've taken the meat off, I glue or wire the bones together and mount them on a block of plaster of paris or wood.

"Two of my larger skulls, a cow and a horse, were obtained in Wisconsin. Most of my mounts came from my home neighborhood. I've done full skeletons of a 'possum, dog, mole, robin, mouse and cat."

Melvin, 15, has never sold any bones but says it could be a profitable business.

"I've made afterdinner speeches on my collection and exhibited it at the county fair and the annual meetings of the State Junior Academy of Science."

Melvin's address is General Delivery, Muncie. If you're ever in Melvin's home town here's the way to find his home. "Just drive out Burleigh drive," Melvin's father says, "to the place where the smell is strongest. Stop there. For that's where the Fields' live."

Newsfacts—The expression, "a skeleton in the closet," meaning a shameful family secret, may have been suggested by the phrase, "a skeleton at the feast," which means a disagreeable reminder at an inopportune time. * * * An English story is often told to account for the phrase. It is a moralistic tale concerning a woman who is happy despite her secret worries. And she has a real skeleton in her closet—the skeleton of a former suitor whom her husband killed in a duel. Every night the husband forces her to kiss the skeleton!

Her Six Pets LiveTogether Very Quietly

Have you a pet shop in your home?

Diane Earl, of Seattle, Wash., can almost answer "yes" to that question. She has a bulldog, a turtle, two canaries, a cat and a monkey!

"My first pet was Kapu, a bulldog," Diane, 8, tells Parade. His name means 'keep out,' in Hawaiian.

"Tom Turtle we found on the desert in Arizona. He eats dandelion blossoms as fast as we can feed them to him. Every winter he sleeps four months.

Sing All Day Long.

"The two canaries, Bobbie and Skippy, sing all day long, even when we have to take them somewhere in the automobile.

"Persia is my large blue Persian cat. I can lead him anywhere on a leash, just as I do my dog. One winter we lived in a hotel. The only chance Persia had to exercise was when I took him out on his leash. He loves to jump in and out of windows.

"My monkey, Tippy Toes, is adorable. But he gets into all kinds of mischief. He likes bananas, pine nuts and celery. He really eats everything but meat.

Diane Earl and Tippy Toes—He Gets Slapped by Persia.

"All my pets are great friends. The dog and turtle sleep together at night. Persia isn't afraid of any dog and never bothers the birds. Sometimes Tippy Toes, the monkey, pulls Persia's tail. Then Persia slaps him."

Diane and her pets live in Apartment 1, Carter Hall, 901 East Forty-third, Seattle.

Newsfacts—There are about 200 species of monkeys. Diane's pet, Tippy Toes, belongs to an Indian variety. * * In parts of India monkeys are worshiped as gods. They are allowed to pull up farmers' plants, overrun temples and do whatever damage they desire, all without punishment. No native would dare lift his hand against these "gods." * * Know how monkeys differ from apes? The former have tails, the latter haven't.

Football Captain Wins Art School Scholarship

"Footballs for artists' palettes." That is the swap John Sweeney, 18, is making this fall. While captain of his high school football team in Hartford, Conn., John won a national art contest. His prize is a five-year scholarship to the Fine Arts School, Temple University, Philadelphia. He lives at 319 Cornwall street, Hartford.

Just Wont 'Toot His Own Horn'

But National Cornet Ace Will Talk About Bands.

Dean Smith, of Springfield, Mo., has a right to "toot his own horn." Look at this list of his honors:

He's been champion cornet player of Missouri for three years. He was lead cornetist for the University of Illinois national school band last fall. Recently, he was named champion cornet soloist in a national music contest at Lawrence, Kans.

And yet he prefers to talk about bands in which he has played, rather than "toot his own horn."

"I was just lucky in getting good teachers and breaks," he says, and explains:

"While in junior high school I got a chance to join the famous Robertson's Boy Scout Band of America. It has 400 members and is the largest Scout band in the world.

At Chicago Fair.

"I was soloist with this group for five years, playing at such places as the Chicago World's Fair and the Dallas Exposition.

"I also played in our school dance orchestra, concert orchestra and band.

"Some time I hope to do what Randy Brooks (interviewed in a recent issue of Parade) has done. I want to go to the top. With lots of hard work, I think I can do it."

Dean will enroll in the University of Chicago this fall.

Newsfacts—Cornetists and other hornblowers in the Midwest had a tough time playing during the heat wave last summer. The instruments' valves contracted, gave rise to all sorts of sour notes. * * The modern cornet was originally a bugle with keys. A nineteenth century Irish bandmaster named Halliday, rigged up five keys on his bugle, adding 25 tones to the instrument. * * And then, like so many inventors, Halliday sold his patent for a song. Matthew Page bought it for only £50 (about $240), reaped a handsome profit.

Their School Is Riding School

Here's W. H. Denny, "Principal" of the Reno, Nev., Riding School Where Boys and Girls Go for a Ride—Not for Books. A Pupil Illustrates How "Classroom" Work Is Done.

It's fun to go to school in Reno, Nev., boys and girls there say. Instead of studying books, they ride ponies, and on school outings take trips into the mountains.

"I take out a string of 10 or 15 ponies and ride the boys and girls around town," says W. H. Denny, 83-year-old riding master and "principal" of the school.

"Once a week in summer I take the older ones to the mountains on an all-day trip. My regular group ranges from 14 months to 15 years in age. The ponies are all sizes, weighing from 275 to 800 pounds."

Ten years ago Mr. Denny started his riding school with three ponies. Now he leads 15 around town, blowing his whistle for regular customers.

His headquarters are at 602 Washoe street.

Dr. of Canine Jurisprudence

Rascal, a dog, may or may not have a pedigree, but he has a degree.

It's an on-the-level law degree from Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn. And Rascal is only an English bull.

Rascal is owned by Ed Smith, jr., Cumberland student.

"The dog was 5 years old this June when he received his doctor of canine jurisprudence degree because of his perfect attendance record for five years in law school." So President E. L. Stockton, of Cumberland, writes Parade. "He has attended every day the law classes and the Bible class for law students every Sunday.

"After each law class I understand he had the habit of going with the boys to get an ice cream cone."

Grades on Per Scent Basis

Here's a prof. who figures grades on the per scent basis.

If the pupil's exam paper is satisfactory, he sprinkles it with attar of roses; if only so-so, with hydrogen sulphide (whew!), and if punk, with butoric acid (phee-e-e-w!).

That's what came of the fuming and fussing by Prof. John A. Madigan, of St. Thomas College, St. Paul, Minn., about low marks made by students in his physics classes.

And the surprising thing is: grades improved about 30 per cent just as soon as the per scent method was introduced.

Prof. Madigan also rigged up a photo-electric cell across the classroom door to discourage tardiness. When a student was late, he broke the beam, which announced his late arrival with the gong of a bell.

Lash of the Whip.

1 The biting lash of a heavy whip on his back may soon remind the reckless auto driver of South Africa to be more careful. A member of the parliament there has suggested grossly negligent motorists be whipped.

If the idea should be adopted, whipping would add another to the long list of crimes it has punished. Back in the Middle Ages, the insane were flogged; in England two smallpox victims were thoroughly lashed, and even a woman caught pilfering wood was beaten.

But chief targets of the whip in those days were vagrants. In England a law prescribed they be tied naked to the end of a cart and dragged around town until beaten bloody. At that, however, the genteel English were merciful. Only serfs could be flogged; whipping was too infamous a punishment for freemen.

Polar Adventure.

2 The North Pole, perhaps the most inhospitable spot on the globe, now is continually inhabited. Although the dramatic Soviet expedition of 42 men has departed and the fanfare has died, four men and a dog will remain at the top of the world for a year.

Their work will be part fulfillment of man's dream for ages—a northwest passage from the Old World to the New. Men suffered and died seeking that route, among them being England's Sir John Franklin and Holland's Henrik Hudson. But the weather reports of the Soviet polar party will guide ships of the air—not the sea—speeding from Russia to America over the pole.

Russia's successful efforts to colonize the polar region has given other nations ideas. England toys with the plan of sending a permanent expedition to the Antarctic. This, however, would not be to pave the way for a new, breath-taking airline. Instead, it would be to tap the vast coal deposits buried in the mountains ringing the South Pole.

Silkworm 'Farm.'

3 The United States has a new silkworm "farm" and it's located—of all places—in the heart of huge, bustling New York City. Warmed by a fire in the attic of John Ousta's house are 45,000 silkworm eggs.

When they hatch, out will come baby caterpillars. These ordinarily are so delicate only 10 per cent can be expected to survive. That 10 per cent eventually will spin cocoons of single silk threads, some more than half a mile long.

How the silk will be obtained will depend on Mr. Ousta. Perhaps he has some new-fangled machine to do the work. But in Japan, which produces one-half the world's silk, no substitute for human hands in unraveling the cocoons has ever been found.

This is the work of girls. The embryonic moths in the cocoons must first be killed, otherwise they would cut the threads getting out. Then, the girls soak the cocoons in water to soften them; next comes the long, arduous, delicate task of unwinding the silk.

Crystal Gazing.

4 Notice to puzzled young ladies: Buy a crystal ring. Girls in Paris have taken to wearing rings surmounted by crystals. Glimpses into these crystals are supposed to reveal the solutions to all difficulties.

The fad is probably the result of some slick jeweler's advertising campaign, yet the fact remains that some people do see things in crystals!

Crystal-seeing hasn't anything to do with the spiritual, however, says science. It's claimed that staring fixedly at any bright object relaxes the mind to a point where subconscious images, like dreams, pass before the eyes.

But that doesn't quite clear up this crystal gazing performance: Years ago, a reputable English author, Dr. Andrew Lang, told how, as an experiment, a person totally unfamiliar with crystal gazing looked into one of the shimmering balls and attempted to tell what each member of the audience thought.

About 50 per cent of the guesses were correct. More amazing, the "seer" said one man's brother in India had bald patches on his head. The listener didn't know, until a letter from his brother arrived several days later, that a tiger had nearly scalped him.

Money, Money, Money.

5 The new currency system of New Guinea is full of holes. It has to be. Natives working in the gold fields don't wear pants, thus have no pockets in which to put their money. So they're paid in silver coins with holes in them. The coins are carried on a string around their necks!

Strange money, you say? You haven't heard anything yet. In the South Sea Islands almost anything goes for currency. The one qualification, apparently, is that it be scarce. For instance, Solomon Island natives use teeth of dogs and dolphins.

Inhabitants of another isle prefer the feathers of honey-eating birds. These sometimes measure 30 feet in length, are carefully preserved, and coiled over fireplaces to be kept dry.

Tasmanian Tiger.

6 The Tasmanian "tiger" is getting a helping hand. The Australian government, realizing the pouched animal is nearly extinct, plans to set up "tiger" sanctuaries.

So again we have the spectacle of of man attempting to save something he tried long and desperately to kill off. For the Tasmanian "tiger" is a fierce and unrelenting slayer of sheep. It has given sheepmen no choice but to kill it. The herders' attacks were so successful in Australia that all "tigers" were exterminated. Only a few survive on the nearby island of Tasmania.

Although really resembling a wolf, the animal is called a tiger by Australians because of its stripes. It is such a terrific fighter it will single-handedly face many dogs, and, like as not, lick them.

Gentle Sport?

7 Bronco riding dangerous? Shucks, it's safer than riding in an automobile, declares Burel Mulkey, of Idaho, last year's bronc' bustin' champ at the Texas Centennial Exposition.

Maybe so, if you know how to fall. That goes for top-notch bronc' riders, too. There's probably none who can boast of never having been thrown. Those rip-snortin', wild little ponies brought in off the range to be broken have some cute stunts.

One of their favorites is to rear straight up several times until the rider feels he's mastered the trick of staying on in that position. Then the horse rears again and this time falls over backward. If a puncher isn't lively in hopping off, he's going to get a lot of horse on him.

Even if a thrown buster isn't hurt when he hits the ground, he'd better scramble away fast. For if the bronc' is really tough, it's mean enough to stamp on the man.

The Eternal Question.

8 What to do with old razor blades? Germany thought it had the old problem solved when it began collecting them as scrap steel to be converted into guns. But that was no answer. It seems "accidents caused in collecting them" made it not worth the trouble.

It may seem strange that disposing of such little things as razor blades should create such a dilemma, but it has. It's certain also that the thanks of mankind will go out to anyone popping up with a genuine way out of the difficulty.

At that, though, builders of new apartments and houses may have the answer. They put little slits in bathroom walls and blades dropped through these find harmless resting places in the foundations.

Tyrone the Third.

9 At 7, Tyrone Power started acting near Hollywood. But he wasn't in the movies, and he didn't grow up into a picture job. He had to travel a long road, climb to fame the other side of the continent after being refused work in the movie capital.

The name of the 23-year-old star of "Lloyd's of London," "Love Is News," other hits, is really Tyrone Power 3d. His father and great-grandfather bore that name, and both were stage stars. Because Tyrone 2d was a great actor, his son naturally took to the stage. Yet, that same greatness made it harder for Tyrone 3d to win his spurs.

Born in Cincinnati, young Tyrone was taken by his mother to California because he was sickly.

There Mrs. Power, also an actress, starred in an annual mission play for five years. In the last one, 7-year-old Tyrone had a bit part.

Then his youthful theatrical career was interrupted, as his mother returned to Cincinnati, where the boy went to school. After high school, he was slated for college. Instead, he persuaded his parents to let him get dramatic experience in Shakespearean plays. So, his father took him in hand, trained him, got him a minor part in one of his own Shakespearean performances.

That fall, Tyrone returned to Hollywood with his father. He was signed for a bit part in the picture his father was to make. Then the older Power died. Suddenly Tyrone discovered he had gotten his part because his father was the star. Now that his father was gone, so, too, was the part.

Followed months of seeking work. Tyrone had no trouble getting in to see people, but once in, found they wanted to talk about his father and not sign him. So he packed, headed for New York.

He stopped over in Chicago, landed a stage job, also got on the radio with Don Ameche, with whom he later appeared in "Love Is News." Successful in the "Windy City," Tyrone Power headed for New York. No luck there, either, until Katharine Cornell, friend of his father, gave him a role in her version of "Romeo and Juliet."

Then came another play with the same great actress, and screen tests. Next thing Tyrone Power knew he was once more on his way to Hollywood—this time with plenty of work to do. He had been given a seven-year contract.

Off the set, he lives with his mother, reads a lot, goes in for amateur photography when not swimming, riding or playing tennis.

Wings of the 10 Monday will be a day of headaches and rejoicing in the aviation world.

Gathered in one of the swank offices of their huge white building in Washington, Postoffice officials will decide the winners of contracts to carry mail over new routes between Washington and Buffalo; Winslow, Ariz., and San Francisco; Dayton, Ohio, and Chicago; Huron, S. Dak., and Cheyenne, Wyo.

Aching heads will be held by unsuccessful bidders. The rejoicing will be done by those companies who offered to carry the mail for the least amount of money per mile. To them it means the opening of new airlines, chances to get more passengers and express, besides nice fat checks from Uncle Sam's Postoffice Department.

At that, however, some of the winners of the contracts may be in for headaches, too. Here's why: The Washington-Buffalo hop, for instance, is coveted by several existing airlines. And each is going to go great lengths to get it.

Suppose a company estimates the mail can be carried profitably over that stretch for 40 cents a mile. Will it bid that figure? Not on your life. It's going to bid much lower to be sure a competitor doesn't walk off with the prize.

If it wins, it will operate the route at a loss for months, then petition the Postoffice Department to raise its rates. Chances are, the Postoffice will agree, but in the meantime the airline will have taken a terrific slugging in the vicinity of its check book.

But will Monday's air mail plums only go to existing companies? Not necessarily. When money is available, the Postiffice decides on a new air mail route according to the number of people it will serve.

It asks for prices on carrying the mail between certain cities. It stipulates the planes shall be powered by more than one motor, will be able to go so fast, meet safety requirements of the Bureau of Air Commerce, shall be able to carry so much weight, so many passengers.

Anyone can form a company and bid for the contract. He must be able to post a bond of $50,000, swear to use the right kind of planes and that he acts only for the company whose name he gives.

After a company has gotten the contract, it has 30 days in which to start preparations to fly, about six months in which to begin service. So real work begins. There is the matter of airports. If a city along the new route never has had airline service, chances are it won't have an airport suitable for transport planes.

The air company either has to build a field, enlarge the old one or get permission from the Postoffice Department to use the field in a nearby town until the other airport is ready.

Even if the field is all right, work must still be done there. Radio men move in, set up their equipment. Carpenters take over, partition off space for the ticket office. Hangars must be made, enlarged or erected.

Meteorologists start studying the weather. Dangerous hills are marked. All this time company engineers have been worrying over the planes. The Postoffice has stipulated the minimum size and speed. The rest is up to the company.

Will it select Douglases or Lockheed Electras, the two most popular airliners today? If many stops are to be made, Electras probably will get the nod. It costs too much to bring a giant Douglas down every few hundred miles or so.

After weeks of worry and work airports are ready, radios working, weather charted, dangerous flying spots marked, planes bought. Still, however, the airline can't begin operations. The Bureau of Air Commerce has yet to be satisfied. Its inspectors must pass on the planes and pilots, observe both on flights over the new route.

If there is no hitch, the airline receives a nice "letter of authority" from the bureau, a bundle of mail from the Postoffice, the thanks of the Chamber of Commerces in the cities it will serve, and, if lucky, a fine batch of passengers, and away a plane goes on a new link in America's ever-widening chain of air highways.

Lookin' 'Em Over.

11 When we told the story of the woman zookeeper we thought we had reached the limit in unusual jobs for women. But we didn't know. Here's Mrs. Roy Largent, scout for the Chicago White Sox baseball team.

Yet, Mrs. Largent went into this work because she didn't think it unusual for a woman. That is, she didn't see why she couldn't do what others do, even if the others are the supposedly superior men.

And how she's done it! Take a look at your sports page, see the fight the White Sox are making for the pennant. Spearheads in the team's drive are such players as Luke Appling, Zeke Bonura, Johnny Whitehead. Those are only some of the diamond stars Mrs. Largent, who with her husband, forms the only scouting team in the country, has sent up.

With such work as this, you'd expect Mrs. Largent was once a tomboy. She wasn't. Her girlhood ambition lay in the distinctly genteel field of music. She studied violin, piano, organ, wanted to be a famous musician.

She might have succeeded, too, but after her marriage she went out to watch the McKinney, Tex., High School baseball team her husband coached. She knew nothing about the game, but sitting in the stands knitting she discovered she could instinctively tell a good player from a bad one.

Visits of major league scouts to her town, plus the fact her husband shortly connected with the White Sox, made her ask herself, "Why can't I be a scout?"

She couldn't find a reason against it, so her trips to ball grounds became more frequent. She was studying. Gradually, she got to know the finer points of the game, learned what to look for in trying to pick outstanding players. Finally she felt qualified.

Then she and her husband teamed up on scouting work. They travel about 60,000 miles annually. Besides being the only scouting pair, they have another distinction. As far as is known, they are the only persons to see four games in one day. Two of them were night affairs.

Dark-haired, keen-eyed Mrs. Largent likes youngsters. That's why she likes to go a-scouting. "There are numerous boys capable of making a success in baseball who just need recognition and encouragement," she says.

Most interesting thing about her work, she declares, is the realization that she's had a part in the making of stars.

Exit With a Bang.

12 Here's a new way to get rid of an old car. In Thurston, Md., the 11-year-old automobile of Mr. L. I. Gregg got stuck in the mud. After laboring long and vainly to free it, disgusted Mr. Gregg dynamited it.

Only a little less gentle was the means taken by Kansas City recently to rid its streets of cars so old as to be menaces. It piled them in a heap and had a nice little bonfire.

Generally, however, tired old automobiles are treated better, given a chance to be reincarnated. They're stripped of everything salable, then the bare steel bodies are crushed by giant presses. This scrap steel is sold to steel mills, which make it into new steel that, like as not, will roll along highways as tomorrow's cars.

However, not all steel finds its way back into automobiles. Now, a terrific amount is being shipped abroad. There steel from cars junked as dangerous to life and limb is turned into guns and bullets to kill.

Track Clear.

13 Plunging down the tracks near Amherst, Nova Scotia, not long ago, a train ground into a string of coal cars. When the wreckage was cleared, four were dead, three others injured.

Time was when such accidents were common. Those were the days when trains were sent out at intervals and the crews instructed to keep the trains a certain number of minutes apart. But things were always getting mixed up. So the "block signal" was invented.

A stretch of track is divided into any number of blocks. At the entrance to each of these is a signal with either a semaphore arm or green light to indicate all is clear when no train is in the block. Electric current flows through the track in the block and when a train hits that track it short circuits the current, changes the signal, warning trains behind.

'God of the 2.5.'

14 From London comes word that the world's oldest ship figurehead has been purchased by a Capt. John Silver. (Not "Long John.") The figurehead once graced the prow on the frigate Golden Cherub, built in 1663.

Although it is the oldest figurehead in existence, it must yield to "Tecumseh" the honor of being the most romantic. "Tecumseh" was taken from the U. S. Navy's ship Delaware, launched in 1820. For no one knows how long it has stood on the campus of the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis.

To visitors it's just an old carving of an Indian, but to naval cadets it's "God of the 2.5"—that figure being the Academy's passing mark for examinations. Brash indeed is the cadet who does not stand and venerate "Tecumseh" before exam time.

The weather-beaten old Indian pleads with the gods of chance for the cadets in other things, too. As the regiment marches off to the Army-Navy football game, each company stops, salutes "Tecumseh."

Troublesome Teeth.

15 Want to stay out of the dentist's chair? Then, eat like the Eskimos.

That doesn't mean to eat with your fingers, but to eat foods lacking refined sugar. At least, that's the statement of scientists studying natives along Alaska's coast.

The researchers examined Eskimos' teeth, searching for signs of decay. But as long as the men of the north stayed away from white man's food their teeth were all right.

This has been observed before. Inhabitants of the lonely island of Tristan da Cunha never have toothaches. They live off fish, fruit, potatoes, occasionally have meat on the table.

However, being out of contact with civilization doesn't insure perfect teeth. Few people on faraway Pitcairn Island have sound teeth. Why tooth decay is so prevalent there is a mystery.

As a matter of fact, the whys and wherefores of "dental caries," as tooth decay is known among dentists, is a mystery the world over.

Swellheads.

16 Bigger prices for rubber have meant bigger bankrolls and in turn bigger heads for the natives of Sumatra. Most of them work on rubber plantations, are dazed, yet proud of their sudden wealth. Some eat off bank notes instead of plates. One flew from his bicycle a flag made of currency.

Little wonder the natives of Sumatra literally have money to burn. For that island is part of the Dutch East Indies, the world's largest producer of rubber. Yet, oddly enough, the rubber trees from which the valuable latex comes are not native to that region.

After Columbus and other early pioneers to the New World reported the strange elastic substance made by Indians from the juice of trees, the world was searched for such trees. A few were found in the East, but their rubber couldn't measure up to the South American brand.

So, enterprising Englishmen smuggled rubber tree seeds from South America and planted them in Ceylon. From these the cultivation spread to other nearby islands, Smart Dogs.

17 Ever hear of dogs working for a railroad? A line running through Wales has hired 25 sheep dogs to keep wandering "woolies" off the tracks. These are some dogs, too.

Trained from puppyhood, they know the meaning of locomotive whistles, find holes in fences through which sheep can be driven in a hurry and even warn track workmen of approaching trains.

Such feats may seem extraordinary, but they aren't particularly difficult to a sheep dog. Sheep dogs are generally head and shoulders above other dogs in intelligence.

The dog usually knows the sheep under its care better than does the shepherd. There have been cases where storms have mixed the sheep in two flocks and the shepherds have been unable to recognize their own charges. Not so with the dogs.

Gabby Gibbons.

18 Gibbons of northern Siam talk to themselves. Studying "languages" of apes, university scientists recorded gibbons' chatter. Then the records were played through amplifiers in the forests. And lo, the jungles were filled with replies to the mechanical gibbon.

This is just another stunt in science's intense study of the gibbon. Smallest of apes, and supposedly the least developed, it is, nevertheless, one of the most human. It walks erect, with its long arms almost dragging the ground.

That isn't its only man-like action.

Like a human gymnast, it swings from branch to branch, using only its arms. Other monkeys generally push off with their feet. But the best human trapeze artist you've ever seen couldn't hold a candle to a gibbon.

One has been known to swing 40 feet. Another was once observed, believe it or not, to pluck a bird out of mid-air in its flight between two branches.

Eight-Year Cork.

19 It's cork-stripping time in Portugal. And as the workers go out to peel the bark off of the cork oak, in their ears is the solemn warning of the government—"don't touch any trees that have been stripped in the past eight years."

In recent years, to cash in on the world demand for cork, some of the trees have been stripped every two or three seasons. The product thus obtained is inferior.

This is because the cork tree is peculiar—it gives better results with age. Until a tree is 20 years old, it is unmolested. Then the bark is torn off once in every eight or ten years. And each succeeding crop is better than the former one.

English pet shops are giving airlines a headache. They have hit upon the idea of supplying the increasing demand for tropical fish by bringing them in by plane.

Not that the airlines aren't looking for business. But the tropicals demand much care in transit. Some of the rare varieties now so popular must be aerated throughout the hop. This means an attendant must stand by and pump air into the tanks.

NO SUCH PROBLEM faces American pet dealers. Few have to go out of their own city to fill an order. For ten years most of the tropicals sold—several millions yearly—have been raised in this country. In every town there are fish fanciers specializing in one or more of the 1,000 or so types raised here.

Indeed, raising pet fish is now a more popular hobby than golf. And it's small wonder. It's inexpensive—you can buy guppies for 25 cents a pair and get a complete aquarium for $2. The fish are hardy and thrive with little care. But, most of all, breeding fish is several hobbies rolled into one and all are fascinating.

IN THE FIRST PLACE, if you are going to do the whole job yourself—and most breeders prefer to—you must choose a tank. Rectangular ones are best because they offer more water surface to absorb oxygen. At any rate, don't get a tank that is deeper than wide.

Plants are next. Let your dealer suggest which of the many types to buy. You must have plants. They absorb carbon dioxide exhaled by the fish and give off oxygen. But put them in the end nearest the light. When in darkness, the plants are harmful. Put nothing in the other end of the tank, so there will be plenty of swimming room.

Let the plants sit for a few days while they take root and the water settles. Add a few snails or other scavengers and you are ready for fish. Keep the tank at a temperature near 75 degrees. And put glass over it. This keeps out dirt and dust, prevents the fish from jumping out and maintains even temperature.

With a complete tank you have three jobs. You are raising fish, plants and scavengers. And you won't have long to wait. Within a few weeks all will grow enough to start you thinking about adding another tank.

WITH THE PILGRIM fathers on the Mayflower were two dogs—a mastiff and a cocker spaniel.

Dear Prof.: Why do lambs wag their tails when they are feeding?

RAYMOND WHITTAKER.
Circleville, Utah.

Since both Mary and Raymond had a little lamb, I think I'll have the same, with mint sauce on the side. On second thought, I think I'll take it on the lamb. On third thought, instead of taking it on the lamb, I guess I'll stick around and answer your question—I, being an old sheep-counter these sultry nights, and, besides, having taken more than one lamming as a youngster. And I once had a little lamb who had a waggin' tail, but he was luckier than most. One cold night he got a little hoarse to go with the waggin'! . . . As to my conclusions about the lambs' conclusions, I believe the wagging is a way sheep and lambs have of talking to one another. And what do you suppose they talk about? Just like humans they talk about the wether, often remarking, "Isn't the wether, the bell wether, terrible these days?" . . . Another reason is that the lamb would rather wag his tail than have the tail wag him. Wouldn't you?

That Old Wag.

Prof. Phiddlefuddle, Phoo. E.

P. S.—Versatile fellow, the Prof.! He can talk about sheep and lambs, too, with equal ease—in fact, he's always talking about lamb stew! . . . Send in your questions and see if you can make him scratch his wool.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

"Sky Storming Yankee," by Clara Studer. $3.00. Stackpole Sons, New York City. Illustrated.

An instinct for motors made Glenn Curtiss successful, this biography shows.

Curtiss left school when 15. Bicycles were his first venture. Motorcycles came next. With one he made himself, he set a world's speed record that stood for five years. At other times he tackled boats, streamlined automobiles, Florida real estate. He invented the seaplane and the amphibion; evolved the first dirigible motor, used in U. S. Army dirigible No. 1.

To tell of Curtiss' work with airplanes is a book-length story in itself. He made the first public flight in a heavier-than-air machine. He won $10,000 for his then phenomenal (in 1910) flight from Albany to New York. Representing the U. S., he took first place in the first air meet, held at Rheims, France, in 1909. He carried the first piece of air mail. His JN4D, or "Jenny," was a famous war plane. The NC4, first to fly the Atlantic, was a Curtiss airplane.

He became wealthy and successful, but found no peace. Patent violation suits kept him in court for years. He made errors in business decisions. Still, his "by-guess-and-by-God" machines made history, and this story of his life makes excellent reading.

The Author—Clara Studer was the first woman publicity director of a large aviation company, the American Aeronautical Corporation. Has also been head of the women's department at Curtiss-Wright and editor of Airwoman. At present she's aviation editor of Sportswoman, published in Philadelphia.

"JUST MY LUCK!" bemoaned Lazy Larry. "The bank president advertised for a right-hand man, and I'm left-handed."

"Broadway Melody of 1937"—"It stands alone as the biggest musical attraction now on exhibition anywhere on the face of the earth on stage or screen, in stadium or under canvas." In the face of this modest little catchline concocted by M. G. M.'s publicity boys, all we can add is "Gosh!"—except that Eleanor Powell and Robert Taylor lead the list of imposing names.

What It's All About—Well, there is a romantic story underlying the many big goings-on. There'd have to be something romantic with the super-handsome Robert Taylor around—but we really don't know what it is. But so long as boy meets girl amid such Gargantuan settings and such a wealth of names as M. G. M. promises, what difference does it make? . . . There is, in case you don't already know what a big musical is like, lots of comedy, lots of dancing, lots of singing and a good deal more than lots of eye-dazzling chorus effects. And there are, in addition to Miss Powell and Mr. Taylor, such outstanding personages as Buddy Ebsen, Judy Garland, Sophie Tucker, Willie Howard and Robert Benchley to swing things along.

Eleanor Powell.

Star—Eleanor Powell, of the twinkling legs and ditto eyes, is, in the opinion of Hollywood, perhaps the most natural and unaffected person there. Yet she took her first dancing lessons, when 6, to cure a bad case of bashfulness and self-consciousness! In doing so, she discovered she had dancing talent. Broadway discovered it some ten years later when she scored her first big success in "Follow Thru." Hollywood discovered it in 1935.

STAMPS

Have you ever seen a U. S. parcel post postage-due stamp? Do you know what a $100 stamp looks like?

At last you can see. Uncle Sam (the Postoffice Department in disguise) has issued a booklet titled, "Description of United States Postage Stamps," which shows pictures of our stamps from 1847 to 1936.

PAPER-BOUND, the booklet is sold for 25 cents by the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. Cloth-bound copies cost 75 cents. You can order by mail.

Never before (we're not press agents) have such pictures been printed. The Government, afraid of counterfeiters, long ago prohibited their printing by any one. But if the Government can make laws, it can also break them. It forgot about the law when this booklet was printed, but no one seems worried.

THE BOOKLET doesn't try to tell you how much U. S. stamps sell for today. It blithely ignores grills and secret marks and other tremendously important features. It doesn't include revenue stamps, stamped envelope designs, post card stamps, postoffice seals and several other stamp types.

But—it gives you pictures of all regular postage designs, commemorative stamps, air mail stamps, special delivery, postage due, carrier stamps, registry, etc. It explains that State surcharged stamps were issued in 1929 because of postoffice robberies in the Midwest. The surcharges made it more difficult for robbers to dispose of them. It's crammed full of accurate information you'll want to know.

Buy a copy of this booklet if you can possibly afford it. We can't indorse it too highly.

CALL of the WILD

Most of us think of hawks as cruel, killer birds. But one of our most common species, the red-shouldered hawk, cannot be listed as such. Instead of killing poultry and other birds, he actually aids farmers by dining almost exclusively on mice, grasshoppers and other harmful animals.

Indeed, the red-shouldered hawk is just an old "home lover." One pair has been known to nest in the same forest for 40 years. As long as a tree remains it will return to the same nesting spot. It loves to build, and will often make two nests a summer. If planning to use an old nest, it puts a "no trespassing" sign—a twig of evergreen—on the nest early in spring. Woe betide bird or animal that does not heed this warning.

About 20 inches long, the red-shouldered hawk has a wingspread of 44 to 50 inches, is named for its reddish brown upper feathers. Beneath, it is a lighter shade, barred and streaked. Its substantial nest of twigs and bark often lasts for years.

Buzzard's Roost

By Jack Lacey

Illustrated by Robert Pilgrim.

SYNOPSIS

WHO KILLED Fenton Sykes? That question plays a big part in the life of 17-year-old Jed Martin. For Jed, his father, Lem Martin, and brother, Abel, found the body of the Tennessee "hill country" farmer. They discovered no clues except Fenton's own gun on a rock near the body and Fenton's spectacles close by the gun. Because the Sykes and Martin families are bitter enemies, the Martins wish to avoid appearing to have any connection with the tragedy, so do not report it to Sheriff Weaks. But later, the Sykes' find the body and bring up bloodhounds which pick up the trail left by the Martins! Jed, scouting nearby, races to warn his family. He knows the Sykes' will be certain the Martins murdered their kinsman and in revenge, will wreak "hill country justice"—mob violence. The situation appears hopeless, so the Martins flee to Buzzard's Roost, a lonely mass of boulders in the distant hills. But there, Jed realizes their flight amounts to a confession of a crime they did not commit. He determines to summon Sheriff Weaks. He eludes the Sykes' posse that is searching for them and gets the sheriff. On the way he figures out what he believes is a solution to the tragedy. While hastening back to Buzzard's Roost, he wrings from the sheriff a promise to let him test his theory. But will they reach Buzzard's Roost in time? Jed's heart sinks as they draw near and he hears the noise of the Sykes' closing in on Buzzard's Roost. He looks anxiously at the sheriff.

Installment V.

THE Sheriff read Jed's fears. "We'll git there, son. We'll git there." His sympathy sped the skiff along. Soon they nosed fast into the bank.

Jed's mind was a blank as they stumbled and ran over the rough country toward Buzzard's Roost. Afterward he remembered nothing of those frightful miles except that the sheriff seemed aggravatingly slow and awkward. He puffed profusely, cursed softly.

The panic that had hypnotized Jed when he looked down on the lifeless body of Fenton Sykes returned. Again he felt the overwhelming press of circumstances, the sense of impotency that left him numb.

Ahead came the baying. It was clearer. The boy and sheriff were gaining on the posse. The crown of Buzzard's Roost loomed nearer as the faint smoke-like mist that hung over the valleys began to lift.

Two vultures floated ominously above the peak. Jed saw them as black spirits ready to haunt the dying breaths of his kinsmen. The thought spurred him into a run, a broken, zig-zag run up the sloping, steaming rocks.

The sheriff was following laboriously and at a distance. "We gotta hurry!" Jed spoke sharply. But his words were broken by a shot.

"Boom!" The report cracked through the hollows and re-echoed from the hilltops.

"Boom, boom," came two answering shots from the Roost.

• • • •

THE fight was on. The hideout of the Martins had been found. The gunfire settled down to an irregular succession of explosions.

Jed looked up. He could see the two blue-barreled guns of his father and brother rise over the edge of the crowning rock, spit a puff of white smoke and then withdraw to shelter.

A rocky ridge cut off the posse from Jed's view, however. Sheriff Weaks sprinted into action, racing up the slope. But Jed beat him to the top.

Below stretched a panorama of smoke and cursing men. A score or more were advancing cautiously up the incline, dodging from cover to cover, firing and then scrambling forward, and firing again.

Jed turned left and bounded along the ridge. It ran across the small gulley which separated the posse and the Roost, directly in the line of fire. He made for a huge boulder that stood like a pulpit in full view of the defenders above and the attackers below.

Jed began to shout as he ran. "I'm a-comin', Paw. I'm a-comin'. I got the sheriff." But the sheriff had been left behind in the final burst of speed that brought Jed to the boulder.

Jed scrambled up the 10-foot mound of rock, oblivious of the bullets that whined about. One struck near his hand, ricocheted off with a mournful whirr.

• • • •

WITH his last remaining strength he gained the top and leaped to his feet.

"Stop it! Stop it!" he began to yell. But his voice sounded hysterical and inadequate. The barrage of bullets continued.

Jed turned to the men below and cupped his hands to shout again, but he stopped short. He caught sight of a familiar figure that emerged from behind a rock.

Jed recognized the man as Tal Sykes, Fenton's distant cousin. Yes, it was Tal, for he was drunk, weaving on his feet. He had been drinking hard all during the night. Tal advanced, eyeing the boy like a snake. Then he stopped and raised his gun to his shoulder.

Deliberately he took aim, directly at Jed. The boy saw the barrel waver and settle on his chest.

"It's jest me—it's Jed!" he blurted out. "Don't shoot!"

Tal kept his cheek pressed to the stock. "Yeah, I know who it is," came the thick-tongued reply. "An' I'll git you, you little skunk."

Fear froze Jed to his tracks. He waited. But Tal did not pull the trigger. Jed saw him raise his bleary eyes from the sights and squint. Then the barrel slowly sank.

"The drunk ol' fool," came the voice of Sheriff Weaks over Jed's shoulder.

"Put that gun down, Tal Sykes," the sheriff ordered.

The officer had arived just in time to stay Tal Sykes' trigger finger.

Jed sank to the rock—weak and unnerved. He heard the officer raise his voice. "Stop this shootin', men. In the name of the law, I command you."

His sonorous shout took the noise of the battle in its stride and even carried to the top of Buzzard's Roost. A painful silence settled over the scene.

He Stuffed the Blue Denim Coat With Leaves and Twigs.

Jed rested. The sheriff would tend to everything, for the time being at least. And he must conserve his strength for the final test—his experiment to prove how Fenton Sykes had met his death.

• • • •

FOUR hours later a tense mob gathered around the spot where the lifeless body of Fenton Sykes had been found 24 hours before.

In the center of the gathering stood the three Martins, in custody of Sheriff Weaks. Sam Sykes waited impatiently a little to one side, backed up by the men who had accompanied him on the man-hunt.

Sam was speaking: "Hit's a dang fool idea, if you ask me. Here we been a-chasing these here murderers all night and the sheriff he ups and steps in all because that fool Martin kid has a 'speriment to do."

"Wal," came an answer from the crowd, not loud but purposely audible to Jed, "You know what'll happen if this 'speriment don't work out. There never was a jail in this here county could hold a guilty man, if he was wanted right bad."

Jed knew what the speaker meant. Many a time had the jail doors been smashed down and the mob's victim been found tortured and dead on the following morning.

The boy trembled as he surveyed the scene. A sodden, red spot marked the place where Fenton's life blood had trickled down his coat to the porous earth.

Jed pointed it out to the crowd. And then he jerked off his own snagged, blue denim coat and began stuffing it with leaves and twigs until it assumed the proportions of Fenton Sykes' body.

He took the dummy he had made and placed it beside the bloodstain, exactly where the corpse had lain. The neck of the coat leaned against the log, the sleeves dangling like an armless man's.

From the sheriff, Jed got the dead man's glasses. With meticulous care, he arranged them on the log as he recalled seeing them.

Jed borrowed the sheriff's watch. His own had been ruined in the water. Fifteen minutes to 9. He must hurry. Five minutes more and it would be the same second he had heard the fatal shot the morning before.

• • • •

SHERIFF WEAKS next handed over the fowling piece—Fenton Sykes' gun. It was loaded with powder and shot, with an unexploded percussion cap beneath the uplifted hammer. Jed set the gun in place. The spot was easy to locate, for the imprint of the stock and trigger guard was still visible in the soft clay.

Then he stepped back to review the reconstructed death scene.

From behind him came Sam's taunting voice. "The Martins claim they didn't have nothin' to do with this here murder but that Martin kid sure knows how everything was a-layin'."

The sun poured down through a lane of green leaves. Jed squinted his eyes. How real the layout looked through half-shut lids!

He looked at the watch. One more minute.

Jed glanced around at the haggard face of his weary father. All talking had stopped.

"Now watch," Jed directed. His voice was steeled and his eyes flinty.

He dropped to his knees directly beside the gun. The crowd closed in. The sunlight flashed on the tortoise rims of the glasses.

In the soft clay beside the gun appeared a disc of light. The powerful lenses were gathering up the sun's rays and focusing them into a spot the size of a dime.

• • • •

THE spot traveled almost imperceptibly, but surely, onto the plate of the fowling piece, then to the base of the percussion cap. There is seemed to linger.

The tenseness was unbearable.

Then came a deafening roar. The gun convulsed and belched a shower of lead. The dummy heaved, riddled with shot, a great hole torn in the side.

Everyone began to talk at once. Jed sat there on his knees in a daze. Over the uproar boomed the voice of the sheriff. "Can't ya see?", he expounded to Sam Sykes. "The sun comes through them glasses and is turned on the cap. It gits hot and explodes and—the boy's right! That's how Fenton Sykes was kilt. He wasn't murdered by nobody."

Jed threw himself hysterically forward on the remains of his coat. He wept violently. Every ounce of strength flowed from him. "It worked, it worked," he kept whispering to himself, time and again.

His father placed a grateful hand on his shoulder. "Don't cry, son. Don't cry. Everything's all right."

Jed didn't raise his head. "Oh, I ain't a-cryin' over that. Just my coat here. It's all tore to pieces."

(The End.)

'How I Make Money' By Edwin Smith

Editor's Note: Every boy and girl wants to make money—for school, hobbies and many another need. Parade here presents another in a series of articles on "How I Make Money," in which Paraders themselves tell how they do it. Others will follow in this space every week. By reading this column you may get a profitable money-making idea.

I am earning extra money by raising chickens. Besides the money, though, I wanted something of my own for which I would be fully responsible. My flock of about 120 hens gives me both. About 6 years ago, when I was 10, my father gave me 10 hens. From then on I have been on my own. I've bought my feed, cared for the hens and if expenses exceeded receipts, it was up to me to make good.

I made enough the first year to buy more hens. In that way I have kept increasing my flock. Last year, instead of buying more hens I bought and raised 300 chicks. I found it cost less than half as much to raise them as to buy full-grown hens.

Any boy or girl who has a place for it and is willing to spend the time can make money raising hens. But taking care of them is more easily talked of than done.

Fresh water must be kept where the hens can reach it at all times. Meals must be regular or chicks will fight. Laying hens must be fed as early and as late in the day as possible. The chicken house must be kept clean and the floor dry.

I sell my eggs wholesale, as do most people who live in rural communities like Hebron, Conn., my home town. But if you live near a city, a retail route can be established if you give your customers a square deal. Remember that. You can't mix grade 2 eggs with grade 1 and get away with it.

I advise beginners to find a reliable hatchery nearby and buy their chicks. Do not buy too many to start. If you want 30 hens, for example, order about 100 chicks. Half of these will probably be roosters and 15 or more will die. The man who delivers the chicks will tell how warm to keep the chicks and other details. Still better, write the poultry leaders of a 4-H Club, if one is near you.

As I said, nearly anyone can raise chickens. I have earned spending money and added to my bank account with mine. But don't forget that eggs and chicks cost something. And the grain bill has to be paid before you get anything.

Girls' Turn

Yes, it's the ladies' turn next for a serial story. And we promised them one, you'll remember.

Next week will start a five-part story called "Little Willie Helpless, Inc.," a lively yarn with as much personality as the group of girls who constitute the "heroine."

Readers, as well as Readeresses, will enjoy this serial, we believe—especially the antics of Bud Phillips, the brother of one of the girls. Gretchen Baird has written a story you won't want to miss.

LETTERS

Northland Tragedy.

Parade: A long time ago I had an article printed in Parade concerning my Danish correspondent in Greenland, Carl Werge. I have a bit of news about him, and I thought you might be interested.

Several months ago one of my letters to Carl was returned with the word "Dead" written opposite his name. I was quite startled and immediately wrote the governor in the place where he worked, Egedesminde, and then waited several long months for a reply.

Two weeks ago I heard from the governor. The first and closing lines were written in English, the rest in Danish. So I went to a friend and had the letter translated. You remember my telling you that Carl's job was to carry supplies each year from a ship to the various outlying villages near Egedesminde and farther north? In the spring, even before the ice broke, he had to load supplies on his dog sledge and start out. Later on, when the ice was breaking, he would use a Greenlander's kayak, or boat.

Last spring Carl started out as usual with a friend named Neilson. The ice was breaking up, but he went on his sledge. Somewhere along the route the ice broke beneath him and men, sledge, provisions and all went under the ice. Carl evidently had tried to save the other man, but became exhausted and died from that and exposure to the frigid water. Government officials investigated, but could learn nothing more than that.

I have lost a grand friend, but I still have the letters and the memory of his friendship. I thought you might be interested in what became of Carl. SALLY EKINS.

Old Saybrook, Conn.

Readeress Ekins struck up a correspondence with 24-year-old Carl Werge by addressing a letter to his city marked: "To any boy or girl who wishes to correspond with a girl in America." Carl, who had gone to Greenland from Denmark as a Government worker about two years before told her of the people and how they live; described the beauty of the land and its most gorgeous natural spectacle—the toppling of a melting iceberg. When the berg seeks a new center of gravity, the sunlight is reflected from jagged peaks of ice in a burst of color that rivals the rainbow and the water is frothed to a white foam until, finally, the berg settles to rest.—Ed.

Kinsman Contacted.

Parade: When my recent Help! Help! was published I was really happy to hear from so many girls. One day I received a fat letter from Oregon. Not knowing anyone there, I was surprised. I found the letter was from a man named Early in Portland. Not knowing anybody by that name except relatives, we have traced back our family trees and found our relation. I thank you a million times for my Help! Help! For without you I could not have found him.

KATIE KENT EARLY.

Charlotte Court House, Va.

Friend Wanted.

Parade: I wonder if Parade can help me. I am looking for an ideal friend. A true all-around friend and not a fair weather one. A friend that can be trusted with precious secrets and will share troubles as well as joys. A friend with just a tiny bit of temper, mischievous and full of fun; ready to take and give a dare; one with plenty of imagination; one who has tasted sorrow as well as joy; one who loves nature. In fact, I want a truly true friend. If there are any Paraders who think they can measure up to this standard please drop me a line.

MARY ELLEN PREWITT.

Forest City, N. C.

A Different Life.

Parade: I can hardly wait until Monday to get Parade. I say Monday because we live 34 miles from the nearest railroad and get mail only three times a week. I might also mention I ride two miles to school on horseback, and sometimes I walk. AMY MARIE LIND.

Lynn, Utah.

Here's another "My Life Is Different" letter. How about sending in yours?—Ed.

Miss Bisbee Replies.

Parade: Since my last letter, many requests that the serials should not be dropped have indicated that these stories were not, as I suggested, the logical omission. However, I think it would be wise to give the girls a story especially for them. Printing snortshorts by Paraders between the serials is indeed an excellent idea.

Also since my previous letter several Readers have risen in defense of the word "Readeress." Of course, there is little objection if Paraders really want it. I called attention to it merely because it seemed rather inconsistent with the trend of modern language reforms of dropping the suffix "-ess" even where it has always before been recognized as correct.

It seems the Letters Column is distinctly below the standard of the rest of Parade. If it were possible to publish more interesting and informative letters like the one on the Hindenburg disaster by Gloria Sharpe, it would not only improve the column, but encourage others to write such letters instead of the impractical suggestions and—worst of all—the hateful and abusive personal criticisms that are so prevalent in the Letters Column. I am sure few people would write, for publication, a letter telling someone to "dig a hole and jump into it" if they realized how plainly it reveals disagreeable traits of character. Of course, there will always be controversy, but let's make it friendly instead of hateful.

E. MIRIAM BISBEE.

Gray, Me.

Parade: I disagree with the critics of Readeress Bisbee. It is only right for her to use her dictionary.

Sissies, Eh?

Parade: I read where someone wanted to take out the 'Round the World page so I started reading it to see what it was like. Now I read it every week and enjoy it.

JOYCE GILGUT.

Box 356, Route 4, Stockton, Calif.

Parade: I must make a reply to Readeress Joyce Craig. What does she think sissies are? I think Around the World is very educational. No one is a sissy who reads it. The ones who don't like it are the sissies. They don't know what it's all about. HELEN WHITE.

Pribble, Va.

Parade: To Readeress Joyce Craig: The Around the World page is the most educational and interesting feature in Parade. Anyone interested in progress realizes this. And if anyone thinks I am a sissy, I invite them to meet me in a secluded alley and we'll settle that matter.

A Rising South African Star

No Left-Hander on the Links

Dad Teaches Southpaw to Play Golf 'Vice-Versa.'

David Perkins—as left-handed as Lefty Grove—had to learn to play golf right-handed. He learned so well he's now winning tournaments.

The 17-year-old's golfing was limited mostly to matches with his dad, until this year. Then he entered the Daytona Beach Junior championship and Ormond Beach tourney. He won both these Florida titles.

"I am naturally left - handed, throwing a baseball that way and even kicking a football with my left foot," David writes from Williamsburg, Ky.

"When I was 8 my father started me swinging a golf club. 'I want to make sure you won't play golf left-handed,' he said."

David's father is himself a winner of many tournaments. "He and Jimmy Thompson, pro at the Ormond Beach Club, taught me to play," David adds.

"When I was 9 I played a match with the late John D. Rockefeller, sr. He was 90 at the time and we were the oldest and youngest players at Ormond Beach."

Newsfacts—Many another natural left-hander has found it advisable to learn right-handed golf. Pros say they don't know how to teach "in reverse," and only half a dozen American pros are "southpaw" players. • • The "lefties" have two other complaints. They couldn't get good left-handed clubs until about five years ago. Also, courses are laid out to favor 95 per cent of the golfers—the right-handed ones. • • Incidentally, some left-handed golfers are King George VI of England, Edsel Ford, Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth, Lefty Gomez and Lefty Grove.

A Challenge!

Looks like Parade has started something.

A few months ago we carried the story about 16-year-old Buster Miller. Buster was the 112-pound boxer who was so good he couldn't find anyone his weight to fight him around Washington, D. C., his home city. Well——

Down in Richmond, Va., 17-year-old Bernard Sties read his story. Bernard is a fighter himself, and also in the 112-pound class. He tells Parade: "I will fight Buster on a week's notice, in either Washington or Richmond."

Bernard has a record that compares with Buster's. He has been fighting four years, and in 100 bouts has lost only four. He holds the Virginia-Carolina title in his class.

Of course, we wouldn't start any fights—of course not! But here's Bernard's address, just in case: 713 North Twenty-seventh street, Richmond. And—also just in case—his coach, Carlyle Loser, lives at 3031 Forest Hill avenue, Richmond.

Thousand Fan Letters!

Parade: Thanks to the write-up you published on my parachute jumping about a year ago, I have received over 1,000 fan letters from Paraders. To date, I have made seven jumps, all successful.

WINIFRED BAYER.

121-21 One Hundred Ninety-Sixth street,
St. Albans, N. Y.

The write-up concerned Readeress Bayer's difficulties in making her first 'chute jump. She was delayed by bad weather, hampered by lack of funds, and once, when on the wing ready to "turn loose," her 'chute opened prematurely and she was snatched back by the pilot. When she did jump she landed in the hands of the law. Her father was held by officers for "risking the life of a minor." He was released when Winifred promised not to leap again before her sixteenth birthday—a few weeks later.—Ed.

Takes Every Tennis Title In Province

Already Sheila has won about every possible title in her home province, the Transvaal. Nationally, she is ranked No. 11. And she's proved her mettle against foreign tennis invaders.

Sheila Piercey.

It was at a recent national championship match that Sheila played Nancy Lyle, noted English player. "An English team was touring South Africa at the time," she explains. "It was my luck to draw Miss Lyle, their second ranking player, in the first round."

Only after a terrific struggle did Sheila lose, 6—8, 4—6. "Fortunately, I was at top form," she says.

"I began playing tennis at 10. At that time we had just moved in our present home at 1 Van Hulsteyn street, Kenilworth.

"Within a few months I entered my first tournament and went to the semifinals. I now hold the senior singles and doubles titles of the Eastern Province, the Western Province singles and mixed doubles, and two club championships.

"I usually practice two afternoons a week at doubles, once at singles. But I practice every day for a week before a tournament."

Newsfacts—England, France and the United States have supplied all the greatest women tennis players. England had all the best players until France's Suzanne Lenglen and America's Helens, Wills and Jacobs, began dominating the field. • • But Sheila may be South Africa's first great international player. May Sutton, first American to win the English title, generally considered the world's championship, turned the trick at 17. • • Women's tennis has no such international arrangement for tournaments as has the men's game. Only big international match is for the Wightman Cup and that is still exclusively an English-American scrap.

THE GREAT Nickname Get-together has started to "steamboat!" And in such numbers that we can't possibly announce winners this or next week as we had hoped. But we'll get to them.

Fun Corner

They're on the Editor.

Obliging fellow, our aviation expert. "Wanta fly?" he asked the pretty girl who rushed into the office the other day.

"Ooh, yes!" breathed the p. g. expectantly.

"Just a minute," promised the a. e. "I'll catch you one."

Tough Guy.

"G-r-r-r!" growled our Art Editor. "I feel like punching the boss on the jaw again!"

"What?" we whatted, amazed. "Again?"

"Yeah," rasped the A. E. "I felt like doing it yesterday, too."

No Sit-Downer.

"Relax, my boy," said the doctor. "Sit down and relax. You've been polite long enough."

"'Tain't politeness, doc," said the boy, grimacing. "It's boils!"

'I'm in Business.'

Hark, ye business lads and lassies, to the tale of a real business man. Trade was slack around Herman's shoe-shine stand when he hailed a passer-by. "Naw," said the passer-by . . . "Shine one shoe free," offered Herman.

"Well, boss," he inquired after he'd finished, "How's that?"

"Fine," enthused the man.

"Okay," said Herman. "I'll shine the other one for 15 cents!"

How'd You Know?

"Flash!" postcards Mary Lee Tomlinson, 853 West Morgan street, Raleigh, N C. "Ida Knowe, our bright(?) little file clerk, didn't mail that circular letter because she couldn't find any round envelopes!"

'I Aim to Be——'

"A weather forecaster," wires Uppan Kummin, of Little Hope. "There's a business that's all prophet!"

Not Much, Anyhow.

"You can disregard that vile rumor about the new bathing suit I bought," cries our luscious stenog, Lotta Kerves. "There's nothing to it!"

Dizzy Animals No. ?

The toughest beast in all the wild,
The Grrrf fears neither man nor child,
Nor woman! (This last trait of his Should show how tough he really is!)

The lions all tremble when he's near,
As do the tigers, gnus, and deer—
While from the Grrrf the panther scoots
Because he wears two-panther suits!

'Murder at the Brighton'

1 PROFESSOR FORDNEY'S interesting experiment in photo-micrography was interrupted by the ringing of the laboratory telephone. The manager of the smart, exclusive Hotel Brighton, a friend of long standing, urged him to come there at once.

2 IN A LUXURIOUS SUITE at the Brighton he found Elden Hartley, wealthy sportsman, dead—slumped over a practically completed 250-piece jig-saw puzzle. Hartley had been shot in the right temple. There was no gun in the room.

3 IN ANOTHER room two persons nervously waited. One, Ian Bruce, said he visited with Hartley until 9 p. m., at which time the sportsman said he wanted to begin work on a new jig-saw puzzle. Bruce then went to his own suite next door.

4 AT 9:30 BRUCE SAID, he was startled by what he thought must be a shot from Hartley's suite. The windows were open. He dashed there and was surprised to see——

5 IRENE FENWICK, his friend's fiancee, standing in the doorway. He questioned her and immediately notified the hotel manager. Neither had touched anything in the room.

8 AT THIS POINT Yolanda D'Arcy, beauteous night club entertainer, living on the floor below, rushed in. She had just learned of the tragedy. She admitted being in Hartley's suite for a few minutes that evening but claimed she left him feeling quite gay at 8:05. She and Miss Fenwick exchanged quite unladylike glares.

6 IN REPLY to Fordney's question Miss Fenwick said she had called for Hartley at 9:30—they were going to a party. He was dead. A minute later Mr. Bruce joined her.

7 FORDNEY NEXT QUESTIONED a maid and a bell boy. The maid said she was in the suite when the bell boy brought the jig-saw puzzle from the newsstand for Hartley. It was 6:40 p. m. when they left the suite.

9 FORDNEY GLANCED again at the nearly completed jig-saw puzzle while all repeated their statements—without variance. He knew that one of them was deliberately lying and was, therefore, concerned in the murder. How did Fordney know one of the five was lying? Whom did he arrest on suspicion of murder? Answer on last page.

CAPTURING A STILL

Georgia, a dry State, has become a profitable sector for illicit distilleries. The series of pictures shown here were made by photographer accompanying Federal agents on one of their numerous forays into the pine-covered hill. They are shown approaching a "plant" after coming in from all sides.

Associated Press Photos.

A DYNAMITE CHARGE blows up one of the numerous boxes of mash that furnished "beer" for the steam-operated kettles, which in turn produce almost 100 gallons of forbidden spirits daily.

THE BOILER. Here the "revenooers" are using heavy axes to cut up the pressure boiler, leaving it in a condition that would make repairs impossible.

BEER VATS having a capacity of 1,500 gallons in which mash is fermented before being sent through the still. Agents usually make aerial surveys of sections suspected of concealing the illicit plants—a tell-tale column of smoke guides them to these stills.

EXPENSIVE COPPER UNDER THE AX. This Federal officer has beaten a "moonshining" outfit beyond reclamation. It was one of a number found not far from Griffin, Ga. Almost before the echoes of the swinging ax have died away, another will be going up on the opposite side of the hill.

A MOTHER'S PLEADINGS

A Spanish mother, her face wrinkled with age and concern for the welfare of her son, makes a final plea before he marches away with the troops for battle. Directly behind her is a younger woman who raises her hand in the same helpless gesture as she bids farewell to her men folk.

Photocrime

Bruce stated that Hartley said he "wanted to begin work on his new jig-saw puzzle," when he left him at 9 o'clock, yet at 9:30 Hartley had "practically completed it." Fordney knew he could not possibly have done so in 30 minutes and that, therefore, Bruce was lying when he said he left Hartley alive at 9 o'clock, and heard the shot which killed him at 9:30. Obviously Hartley had begun work on the jig-saw puzzle considerably earlier than 9 o'clock. Bruce's lie was designed to establish an alibi for him and involve Miss Fenwick. It did exactly the opposite.

FOR YOU WHO WANT

More than Just an Eight!

A CHRYSLER IMPERIAL FOR YOUR MONEY!

CHRYSLER'S finest . . . that's the Chrysler Imperial! A car of illustrious history . . . for years it has represented the very peak of Chrysler engineering genius.

Now the great Imperial can be yours at the lowest price in history. It doesn't take $3,000 to buy this car today . . . its price is down in the medium-price field.

LUXURY DEMANDS ROOM! You're entitled to roomy luxury in an eight. And the Imperial gives it to you. A long wheelbase of 121 inches. Extra inches of elbow room, leg room and head room. The widest rear seat of any eight in its price field. Seats made "chair-high" . . . so you ride in comfort . . . not on the back of your neck.

REAL PERFORMANCE THRILLS! The big 110 horsepower Imperial engine is more than just eight powerful cylinders. It's balanced with the precision of a fine watch . . . equipped with a modern, high-compression aluminum head . . . delivers its power with the silky silence made possible by Chrysler's famous Floating Power.

AN EIGHT WITH EVERY SAFETY FACTOR! Why buy any eight with less than Chrysler's famous safety features? Get a Safety All-Steel Body for your money. And get Chrysler's matchless hydraulic brakes. Get both of these as only Chrysler can build them . . . after years and years of pioneering, developing, proving and perfecting!

A RIDE REALLY WORTHY OF AN EIGHT! Your eight cylinder money ought to buy more than an average good ride. In the Chrysler Imperial it does! Chrysler pioneered scientific weight distribution . . . has gone farther with it than any other maker. On top of that, the big, roomy Imperial has Aero Hydraulic Shock Absorbers . . . built like the landing mechanism of a plane. All of this plus independently sprung front wheels.

If you are going to step into the fine car class, get a Chrysler Imperial for your money. Look at all the eights . . . stack them up against the Imperial . . . compare every feature. If you do that, you'll come to just one conclusion: Dollar for dollar, the Chrysler Imperial is the greatest eight of them all.

Easy to buy on convenient terms with the official Commercial Credit Company plan.

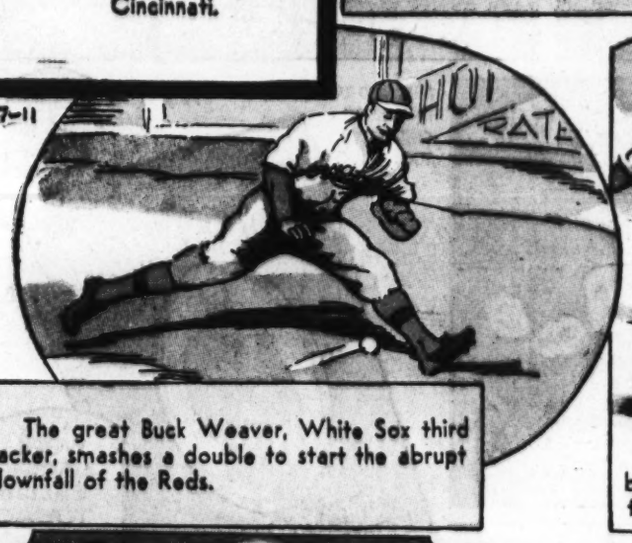
THEY'RE STILL TALKING

About that Tenth Inning at Cincinnati.

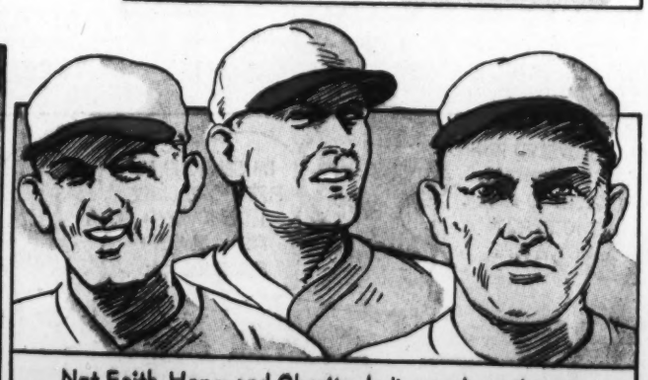
A great partisan crowd sits stunned at the sudden turn in that world series ball game Oct. 7, 1919.



The great Buck Weaver, White Sox third sacker, smashes a double to start the abrupt downfall of the Reds.

The unforgettable Joe Jackson lays down a beautiful bunt and is safe at first. Weaver going to third.

Cincinnati fans roar as the slugging Happy Felsch fans. Up comes Chick Gandil, Sox first-baseman, who hasn't had a sign of a hit. But Gandil rises to the emergency and pounds out a scorching single!



Not Faith, Hope and Charity, ladies and gentlemen, but Weaver, Jackson and Gandil, who pulled that important game out of the fire after the Sox had overcome a four-run Cincinnati lead.

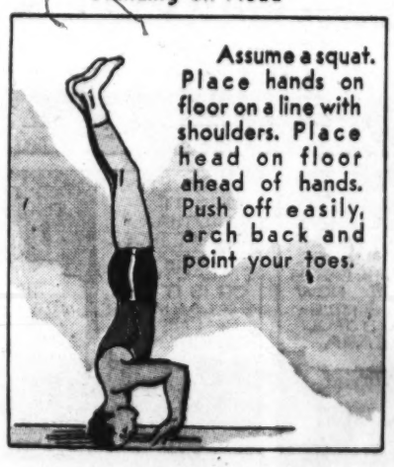
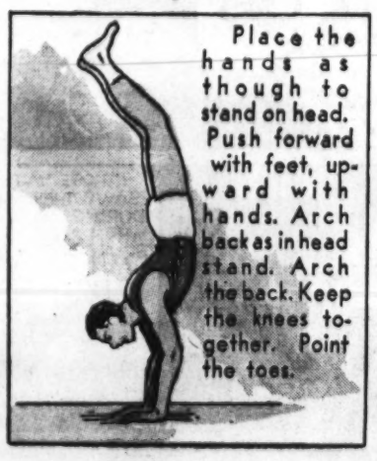
Two Stands and a Spring.

Standing on Head



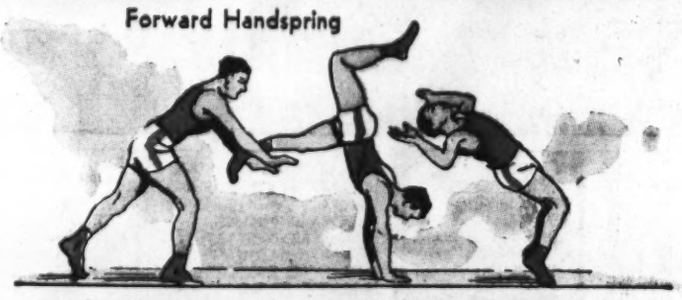
Assume a squat. Place hands on floor on a line with shoulders. Place head on floor ahead of hands. Push off easily, arch back and point your toes.

Standing on Hands



Place the hands as though to stand on head. Push forward with feet, upward with hands. Arch back as in head stand. Arch the back. Keep the knees together. Point the toes.

Forward Handspring



Proceed much in the manner of the stand on hands, except to take a step forward and force the body rapidly through air in order to land on feet.
